Wallace Will Keep Cabinet Job While Campaigning

G. O. P. Aroused

Henry A. Wallace, Democratic Vice Presidential nominee, yesterday had political Washington guessing when he announced in Des Moines, Iowa, that he does not plan to resign as Secretary of Agriculture. Republicans indicated that they were ready to bring pressure to bear on the Secretary because of the millions of dollars he is authorized to lend before the election in November.

Wallace, however, reaffirmed his previous declaration and remarked:

"I believe Herbert Hoover remained in the Cabinet when he was campaigning for the Presidency, didn't he?"

Opposite Was Reported

The nominee's statement closely followed reports from "reliable" sources that Wallace would resign soon to conduct an active campaign.

Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia, was among those who predicted here yesterday that Wallace would not try to fill the post of Secretary of Agriculture while running for the Vice Presidency.

That Wallace might not have decided definitely to remain in the Cabinet was indicated by his statement in Des Moines that he did not know yet what would be expected of him in the campaign.

He is scheduled to come to Washington Thursday to confer with President Roosevelt, and presumably the problem of the Cabinet post would be taken up along with plans for the campaign.

Senator George had said that Wallace "undoubtedly will be expected to carry on a very vigorous campaign." He emphasized that his statement was "unofficial but reliable."

Roosevelt Won't Be Active

That the Republicans would make an issue of the situation was indicated by a Republican member of the House, who declined to be quoted by name. He expressed the opinion that it would be unfair for Wallace to distribute millions in loans while seeking public office, however fair the Secretary might try to be. It was his belief, he said, that Wallace should not undertake conflicting responsibilities.

President Roosevelt has indicated that his campaigning will be restricted to occasional "fireside chats" while he remains close to the Capital to take care of pressing defense business of the Nation. He indicated that his "front porch" campaign would be conducted from the White House and

District Man Drowns as Heat Reaches 97—Year's Highest

Thousands Flee From Sticky City; No Relief Promised

One Washington man was drowned in the Potomac River and five persons suffered heat prostrations yesterday as the Capital sweltered in its hottest weather of the year. The Weather Bureau reported the temperature reached 97 degrees at 3:50 p. m.

Hundreds of citizens left the city hoping to find cool breezes at river and bay beaches.

Creighton McBee, 35, a sign painter, lost his life last night while swimming in the river from the cabin boat Barbara Allen anchored off Crampton's boatyard a quarter mile above Francis Scott Key Bridge.

Harbor Police, who began dragging operations, recovered McBee's body at 10:30 o'clock.

Police questioned McBee's companion, John M. Caldwell, 1229 Fifteenth street northwest, but were unable immediately to learn the details of the man's drowning.

Mrs. McBee, who also was aboard the boat at the time, apparently was not a witness to the disappearance.

Washington's heat casualties included Miss Ethel Shepherd, 40, of Arlington, Va., telephone operator at Emergency Hospital, who was overcome at her work and given first aid at the hospital.

Clarence Robertson, 16, of Arlington, another heat victim, was found unconscious in the 3200 block of N street northwest and taken to

Daily Double Gives Pair $6,132 At Hagerstown—They Vanish

Two daily double bettors turned $2 investments into $3,066.30 apiece at the Hagerstown racetrack yesterday, then vanished without a trace after giving reporters names and addresses which could not be verified.

Holding the only "7 and 8" tickets sold in the daily double pool, they waited more than two hours before appearing at the cashier's window to claim their stupendous winnings.

Then they identified themselves to reporters as William M. Martin, of Brownsville, Md., and Charles West, of 1341 Nineteenth street northwest, Washington. But efforts to locate the men at the addresses last night were futile.

In the 1300 block of Nineteenth street every house was canvassed. The address given—1341—turned out to be non-existent.

It was the second largest double in Maryland's history, thanks to the hard luck of Sheriff Joe Baker, of Washington County, who held two of the lucky tickets but exchanged them for others just before the window closed.

Had the sheriff held on to his pasteboards, the pool would have been split four ways. Baker's two tickets would have brought him a total of $3,066.30, while the two other winners would have received only $1,533.15 apiece.

Royal Problem

How to Address the Windsors Has Bahamans in a Dither

By the Associated Press.

Nassau, Bahamas, July 20.—Confused by the Duke of Windsor's status, further complicated by his appointment as Bahaman governor, this remote colony is pondering pretty problems in British etiquette.

Believing it will be several weeks before the Duke assumes his new duties, officials and socialites are using the time for delving into the intricacies of proper salutations and receptions.

Should the abdicated King be saluted as "Your Royal Highness?" (His rank entitled him to it).

Or should he be addressed as "Your Excellency?" (That's the usual form to a governor).

Should the American-born Duchess be addressed as "Your Royal Highness?" (Now there's a delicate problem, for she was denied that designation in England).

Or should it be merely "Your Grace."

There's nothing trivial about the matter to the quiet Bahamans, who treat with due dignity their obligations as British subjects.

There is considerable debate, too, over the nature of the reception to be accorded the Windsors. Arrangements thus far, pending definite word from Downing street as to the arrival date, have been tentative.

One faction, seeing the Duke's presence as a booming influence on the tourist trade, is advocating a welcome of near-royal proportions for its publicity value.

A more conservative element is holding out for the restrained though cordial reception that is given any new governor.

Not Yet Ready for Fireside

Roosevelt Fit Despite Burden Of High Office, Says Doctor

Whatever the next four years hold for President Roosevelt, his physician, Rear Admiral Ross T. McIntire, considers him physically fit for any tasks they may impose.

Seven and one-quarter years under a ceaseless grind of national problems and international crises have left the President's health "as sound as any man of 58 years could possibly expect," Admiral McIntire said in an interview yesterday.

The Chief Executive's pulse, respiration and blood pressure are normal, his appetite is keen. Thrice-weekly plunges in the White House swimming pool, a daily massage and other exercises keep his nerve and muscle system well toned.

The admiral tries to keep the President's weight between 184 and 188 pounds. When it goes above the limit, Mr. Roosevelt obediently eats a little less. His weight today is 187 pounds.

Longevity is a Roosevelt family trait, the admiral pointed out. The President's mother, Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, 85, and his uncle, Frederic A. Delano, 77, are seldom ill, notwithstanding their active lives. The admiral accordingly reckons the President's life expectancy in terms of decades, not years.

How does Mr. Roosevelt maintain his vigor in the performance of one of the world's hardest jobs, one which has literally worked some of his predecessors to death?

The admiral believes the secret lies in the President's buoyant personality and his zest for life. He said:

"The Chief invariably confronts his many problems in a spirit of constructive optimism. No matter how tough the going becomes, he never yields to useless worry or despair.

"A question settled remains settled.

Nazis Retract 'Warning' To Americas

Apology Offered For Note on Eve Of Havana Parley; Cheers Greet Hull

On the eve of the Pan American conference last night the Associated Press reported that the German legation at San Jose, Costa Rica, had withdrawn with apologies Germany's recent note warning the Central American nations to do nothing "unneutral."

The apologies were tendered by the German minister, Otto Reinbecke, who cabled them to Costa Rica from Havana where he is closely watching developments preceding the opening sessions tomorrow.

Follows Hull's Views

Secretary of State Hull had emphasized in notes to Berlin and London that the conference is strictly a New World affair.

The German note, delivered two weeks ago to the five Central American nations by Minister Reinbeck, stirred up wide indignation in those republics. The American press had denounced Berlin's action as "intimidation" and interference in matters which do not concern the Reich.

A New York Times dispatch gave an indication of the feeling in Havana yesterday, revealing that when Secretary of State Hull, accompanied by Mrs. Hull and 15 economic and diplomatic experts, arrived on the steamship Florida from Miami, he was cheered by the crowd as the boat docked. Later the party received an ovation as its members descended the gangplank.

Hull was met by Dr. Miguel Angel Campa, Cuban secretary of state, and other Cuban state department officials, and by George Messersmith, United States Ambassador, and members of the embassy and consular staffs.

Hull Arrives

Havana, July 20 (AP).—The United States delegation became the center of intense activity tonight in informal conversations aimed at formulating proposals on hemisphere defense and economy at the second meeting of American foreign ministers opening here tomorrow.

The arrival of Secretary of State Hull, with his staff of diplomatic, trade, monetary and agricultural advisers, opened preliminary consultations in which officials of the other American republics sought first to hear details of the United States proposals.

The quiet, unostentatious Hull, however, adopted the role of a "listener" to get a clear picture of the problems facing each of the other countries, before disclosing just how the United States proposes to help them.

The conference, Hull confidently said today, "will be a new demonstration of the vigor and vitality of the American republics when they work jointly for their common interest."

Absent from the preliminary talks was the Argentine delegation, from which is expected to emanate the chief obstacles to Hull's hoped-for unanimity among the 21 republics on measures to safeguard the security and economy of the New World.

Fears for Its Trade

The delegation from Argentina, a country already showing signs of resistance to any plans which might further disrupt its trade with European countries, does not arrive until Monday morning when the business sessions begin.

It seems certain that the United States is seeking to bring the other republics into even more active partnership under the Monroe Doctrine, which already has developed at previous Pan American meetings from a strictly unilateral to a multilateral policy for the whole hemisphere.

Hope of Finding Missing Jersey Boy Alive Fades

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Beachwood, N. J., July 20.—Hopes that 3-year-old Craig Bender might be restored alive to his grief-stricken parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Bender, of Linden, waned tonight as hundreds of volunteers discontinued their hunt for the youngster through the thick brushlands near the house from which he disappeared Thursday night.

Tonight there remained in the search only 111 CCC workers from the Freehold camp and a small group of police and firemen.

Coast Guardsmen dragged the waters of Toms River, but failed to find the boy. Little hope remains that he will be found alive.

Roosevelt Signs 2-Ocean Navy Measure

Construction to Begin Promptly on Largest Fleet in History

By the Associated Press

Prompt action to begin construction of the greatest fleet in world history was promised by the Navy Department yesterday after President Roosevelt signed a bill authorizing a 70 per cent, $4,000,000,000 increase in naval strength.

Within the last 40 days, officials pointed out, construction has been started on 92 vessels previously authorized, thus clearing the way for immediate negotiations on contracts for the first of 200 combat vessels to be added to the fleet under the new act.

Upon completion of those 200 vessels, scheduled for 1946 or 1947, the United States will have a "two-ocean" navy of 701 fighting ships of 3,547,700 tons.

Reassembles Tomorrow

That record-shattering armada would outweigh today's combined fleets of Great Britain and Japan, the two other principal sea powers.

Taking their cue from President Roosevelt, most members of Congress talked yesterday of combining a national political campaign with a continuous session of Congress.

"I pity anybody who proposes to adjourn with the present temper of the country," said Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan.

From the Democratic ranks, Senator George (Democrat), Georgia, predicted that the pending "excess profits" tax proposal, compulsory military training, and an assortment of defense measures would keep legislative machinery busy for many weeks.

With both major political conventions out of the way, Congress will reassemble tomorrow after nearly a month of slight activity. House members centered attention on new tax levies aimed at any heavy profits created by the multibillion dollar preparedness programs and intended to supplement the $1,000,000,000 "national defense" tax measure recently rushed through Congress.

Nazis Intensify Raids, British Hit Back Hard; Guns Roar at Gibraltar

Defenders Dig Canal to Cut The Rock Off From Mainland

By the United Press

Algeciras, Spain, July 20.—Heavy cannonading was heard today from warships off the coast and from Gibraltar, where British defense forces have been digging a 13-foot canal between the "Rock" and Spain.

Gunfire was heard by persons in the village of Estepona, which is 15 miles northeast of Gibraltar on the Mediterranean coast.

The firing came from the direction of Gibraltar, which has been raided several times recently by Italian planes, and from the Mediterranean.

Several warships could be seen from the coast. They were maneuvering and firing.

Early Attack Expected

(Dispatches from Rome reported Fascists were expecting an early offensive against the British in the Mediterranean area, including a possible attack with the aid of Spain on Gibraltar.)

The British, apparently preparing against a possible tank or artillery attack, were digging a canal that would transform Gibraltar into an island in an emergency.

Reports received here stated the canal will be 13 feet wide and 13 feet deep, and is expected to nullify any attempt to move tanks within striking distance of the Rock's advanced defenses.

Large quantities of long-range naval guns are reportedly expected to reach Gibraltar shortly to strengthen the existing defenses.

Air Against Air Attacks

The canal which is expected to nullify tank attacks, also may increase Gibraltar's defensive power against a purely air or artillery offensive.

The arrival of additional artillery would enable the British to concentrate strong batteries against the canal's north bank.

Contrary to reports which were current here from time to time, the British preparations seem to indicate a determination to defend the rock, the loss of which would imperil the entire British position in the Mediterranean and the East.

The War Today . . .

AERIAL ASSAULTS on British Isles grow in intensity. Twelve Nazi warplanes are reported shot down during one of the most violent waves of attacks on England.

Radio Campaign Warns English to Forsake Churchill or Die

By the Associated Press

Berlin, July 20.—Germany unleashed a thunder of words in press and over radio today in an attempt to sway the English people, over the head of Winston Churchill, and get them to end the war.

The alternative, Nazi Germany says, is destruction.

There was, moreover, not the slightest hint either in Hitler's speech or in the words of radio or press that Germany is slowing up one iota in her preparation for this attack. It is assumed that the whole military and naval machine is ready to go at the Feuhrer's word.

No further direct proposal to England may be expected from Hitler, the authoritative Dienst aus Deutschland said.

With the German radio broadcasting English translations of the Hitler speech over and over again, the high command made it plain that there is a much grimmer side to this "realization" campaign directed at England.

Today's communique detailed

Twelve German Raiders Downed; English Batter Reich Factories

London, July 20.—Speeding up aerial warfare against the British Isles, German warplanes today made their most severe assaults on the Island Kingdom.

Britain's air forces shot down 12 Nazi planes over their home waters and territory, repelled an enemy mass aerial attack against a convoy in the English Channel, and inflicted heavy damage during counter-raids to Nazi oil plants, air bases, harbors and communication lines, according to the air ministry communique tonight.

The English Channel was once again the scene of the hottest of the aerial struggle and, as usual, officials would not make public whether any ships were destroyed or any harbors were damaged for fear the Germans might gain information that would be to their advantage.

100 Planes Battle

Early this evening big squadrons of German dive-bombers swooped down on a convoy maneuvering through the Channel. As soon as they were sighted the escorting warships and shore batteries sent up a blistering antiaircraft fire. Meanwhile, British fighter pilots who had been waiting watchfully ashore, jumped into their cockpits, gave their machines "the gun," and streaked skyward.

Soon more than 100 warplanes were dipping and wheeling above the Channel waters, all belching a deadly machine-gun fire, while people ashore ran for cover lest a whipping hail of spent bullets should hit them.

Official reports said that the German attackers fled, many of them badly damaged.

Regarding airplane losses the air ministry communique said that at least six Nazi planes were shot down during the coastal attacks and six others elsewhere during the day, but that only two British planes failed to return home, the pilot of one of them managing to land safely.

336 Civilians Killed

Parts of Scotland, England and Wales suffered bombing attacks during the early morning and later in the day casualties were being reported. Damage was reported done to school buildings, houses and other structures.

One of the four German planes shot down inland, crashed to the earth in southwest England and its crew of four, one of whom was wounded in the fight with the defending planes, was taken prisoner. At another point in England a lone

St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, July 20 (INS).—Charges that a German raider ranging off the West Indies flew the Swedish flag while attacking and sinking three British merchant vessels were made tonight upon the arrival of the Dominican freighter Hispaniola from St. Bartholomew.

The raider opened fire on the 5,228-ton British steamer King John on sight last Sunday, and continued shelling her until the crew—many of them wounded—took to lifeboats, it was alleged.

The Hispaniola left 30 British and 11 Yugoslavian seamen from the three lost ships on St. Bartholomew, a French-owned island. Officers and the wounded from the King John were detained on the German raider.

Mexican General Accused in 'Plot' To Seat Almazan

Mexico City, July 20.—A high official of the Mexican army was held tonight for courtmartial in the military barracks at Merida in a supposed plot to assist the "defeated" oppositionist candidate, Gen. Juan Andreu Almazan, seize the presidency by force.

The military commander at Merida reported that he had "captured" Brig. Gen Barnabe Avila Rui.

The newspaper Grafico said it had learned from authoritative sources, however, that Gen. Avila Rui was seized for subversive activities in favor of Gen. Almazan who, it was noted, arrived today at Havana, Cuba, and announced that he would be "the next president of Mexico."

France's Want Ads Describe Her Legion of Lost Children

By the Associated Press

Paris, July 15 (via Berlin—Delayed).—With an unending stream of pitiful little want-ads, the mothers and fathers of France are searching today for their legion of lost children.

These poignant paragraphs tell of babies, boys, girls—and parents, too—lost in the exodus of civilians fleeing the German advance.

Where are they? Who knows? But read the little ads:

"Will the woman who rescued a 2-month-old baby girl from a camion (army truck) at the Bridge of Orleans please give her whereabouts?"

"Kilbs, seeking daughter Christine, confided to her school teacher for evacuation and disappeared since June 16 from Neufchatel."

"Jacques Leabeau, 9, lost in the evacuation. Can be identified by brown spot over right eye."

"The widow Tola seeks her son, Jean Tola, 15, last seen on a bicycle headed toward Nantes."

More than one ad hints of a faithless servitor. One mother seeks "two children, Jean Claude and Suzanne, 4 and 5 years old, blond, blue-eyed, the same height, abandoned by their nurse to a French military convoy going toward Orleans."

Some of the one-line ads seem like faint voices, crying in a melancholy wilderness.

One of them:

"Little Claude at Ste. Genevieve is waiting for Robert to come back."

And, another:

"Micheline Vienne—papa has not come back."

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

ARMY ICONOCLAST: Six magazine articles soon to appear, by an Ohio National Guard colonel, are apt to cause more commotion at the War Department than any innovations yet suggested. They are startling and would literally turn the Army upside down.

Harlan Miller

They are by Col. H. A. Toulmin, jr., who gained some fame in 1918 by eliminating chaos in the A. E. F.'s aviation, when he became one of the youngest American colonels in France.

Since then he has been a thorn in the side of the stodgier officers.

* * * *

Toulmin's dominant accusation is that our Army is now undertaking to ape German tank and aerial warfare without envisioning the possibility that it may soon be as obsolete itself as the Maginot Line; that the Nazis may have new equipment and tactics before we can imitate their old ones.

* * * *

The Dayton military expert, who himself commands a semimechanized unit when he isn't practicing law, proposes that the Air Corps become the major and basic branch of our new Army, a logical extension of war lessons in Europe.

* * * *

He would have the transport of troops, attack, capture and occupation of objectives carried out entirely by airplanes playing the role of infantry and artillery, relegating other branches to auxiliary and support roles.

"—the grip of tradition."

This is but one of his daring innovations. He is a brilliant critic of traditionalism in the Army, and already he has some support in Congress and in the Army itself.

His series, to appear in an industrial magazine, will conclude with about 100 suggestions for Army innovations and improvements, enough for several good headaches.

* * * *

ETIQUET TROUBLE: With the world topsy-turvy, etiquet and tradition still retain their grip on life in the Capital. With half the diplomatic corps divided in ideological and belligerent camps, and the other half maintaining a sort of ghostly, semi-defunct existence, tradition marches on.

* * * *

For example, hosts who are about to throw a flossy party (and don't think the husbands don't stick their oars in) spend more time deciding who can be invited with whom, and whether the ex-diplomat of an ex-country should be called something fancy like Your Excellency or Mr. Minister, and seated within reach of the olives, than they do deciding the infinitely more vital question of what to offer in the way of food and drink.

* * * *

INTERRUPTING BOB: Some of the smarter Senators have begun to catch on that some of Senator Bob Reynolds' better oratory is aimed directly at some radiant young thing in the Senators' private gallery.

As a result, they have taken to cutting in on him.

"—can't remember 35% of 'em."

They impose a little on Senatorial courtesy and the well-known Reynolds gallantry.

As his Dixie accent grows juicier and juicier, as he discusses the advisability of seizing France's Devils Island and using it as a penal colony for our "alien criminals," and as he looks up to the gallery for appreciation and approbation, they ask him to yield.

* * * *

Of course he yields, with a flowery compliment to the prowess and eloquence of the interrupter.

Then he stands round while the Senator to whom he has yielded embarks on a throbbing oration about Wisconsin cheese or the problems of the brassiere industry.

He must remain standing, to keep the floor and be able to resume after the interruption.

* * * *

Sometimes, in the course of an afternoon, with a 3 or 4 hour oration plusing under his belt, Mr. Reynolds yields to three or four Senators and listens to as many lengthy speeches unrelated to what he himself is discussing . . .

* * * *

One notable development is that although he is younger and more dashing, he is coming to resemble, in oratory and manner, his older, less streamlined colleague, Senator Cotton Ed Smith.

* * * *

ANONYMOUS PALS: One of the more sardonic and worldly of our own diplomats, who is forced to attend many a Washington soiree, estimates that Washington matrons can't remember the names of about 35 per cent of the ladies they greet like long-lost sisters.

Philadelphia Firm Low On East Side Sewer Bids

Joseph Lombardi, of Philadelphia, yesterday submitted a low bid of $27,681 to replace the east side sewer at the Commodore Barney Circle near the John Philip Sousa Bridge.

Seven other firms bid on the job, which will be financed by regular District appropriations. J. L. Boyle Engineering & Construction Co., of Newark, was second low bidder with $27,776.

Garner Still Silent On the Third Term

Willkie Democrats To Hold Meeting in Chicago Thursday

By George E. Reedy, Jr.
United Press Staff Writer

Vice President Garner yesterday unbolted his office door for the first time since the Democratic National Convention in Chicago and received a steady stream of visitors.

He did not, however, break the silence he has maintained about political developments which shunted him to his party's sidelines after an unsuccessful "stop Roosevelt" campaign earlier this year. Some conservative Democrats are in rebellion against President Roosevelt's third-term venture and a call has gone out for a meeting in Chicago Thursday of "Jeffersonian Democrats" to rally behind Wendell L. Willkie.

Close friends of the Vice President say they believe that Garner now considers the convention a thing of the past and that business will go on as usual. One of his visitors was Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, who delivered a personal report on the convention.

Garner to Go to Texas

Garner is expected to leave at midweek for the Texas primaries next Saturday—a periodic ritual with him. Some predict that he may retire from public life upon that occasion. Others scoffed at any idea of retirement, at least until Congress adjourns.

Former Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, was revealed as a leader of a move to organize antithird-term sentiment on a national scale. He has called a "grass roots" meeting in Chicago of what he termed "Jeffersonian Democrats" to support Willkie. Reed was active in a similar anti-New Deal meeting at St. Louis in 1936. Among those invited to the Chicago meeting in the Stevens Hotel was Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, New Deal opponent, who was defeated for renomination this summer. Burke has announced his support of Willkie.

Those invited to the meeting, in addition to Burke, included Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State in the Administration of President Wilson; Joseph W. Bailey, of Dallas, former Representative from Texas; Lee Merriwether, of St. Louis, lawyer and special assistant to the Ambassador to France in the Wilson Administration; Sterling Edmunds, St. Louis; J. Evetts Hailey, Houston, Tex., chairman of the Texas branch of the Jeffersonian Democrats, and Joseph B. Ely, former Governor of Massachusetts.

"Cold Silence" Expected

Most observers here do not anticipate any considerable open bolt from the party, but said that "cold silence" of some of the conservative Democrats might be even a greater factor in the campaign than apostacy on the part of Democrats.

Senator Smith (Democrat), of South Carolina, has announced that he would not support Roosevelt for a third term but added that he would not vote for Willkie. There was speculation whether other targets of the President's "purge" campaign two years ago—Senator George, of Georgia, and Senator Tydings, of Maryland—might follow suit.

Another matter of speculation was whether Democratic isolationists such as Senators Wheeler, of Montana; Clark, of Idaho; Clark, of Missouri; Johnson, of Colorado, and McCarran, of Nevada, were sufficiently "appeased" by the peace plank in the Democratic platform to support the President.

President on Cruise

The President was indifferent to the furor over the third term. He was cruising down the Potomac. He plans to return today and leave perhaps tonight for Hyde Park.

A report circulated here that Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt, who pocketed his ambitions in favor of the President's choice, would get a key post in the campaign, perhaps as the President's personal campaign manager.

Republicans, silent for the most part during the Democratic convention, began to warm up for the fray. Republican National Committeeman Martin said he was ready for the battle and G. O. P. Publicity Chief Franklyn M. Waltman said the Chicago convention was the "best publicity we Republicans have had for a long time."

IN A DAY'S MAIL—Mrs. Charles Cobb Smith, of 1834 North Quintanna street, Arlington, with the baby who was left in a mailbox

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cobb Smith, of 1834 North Quintanna street, Arlington, Va., yesterday were the proud possessors of a 6-day-old baby boy.

The boy had been found, wrapped in a blue blanket, in the mail box of Elbert Lipps, Loudoun County farmer, early Wednesday morning.

Mrs. Smith read about it in The Washington Post on Thursday, and after consulting her husband, an engineer for the Potomac Electric Power Co., set off for Leesburg within the hour. She was accompanied by her mother-in-law, Mrs. Hattie C. Smith.

Action was equally rapid on arrival in Leesburg. There the Smiths had the foundling examined by Dr. Grace G. Purse. Then they appeared before Juvenile Court Judge William H. Metzgar, from whom they obtained an order permitting them to take the baby home.

The Smiths have no children of their own, and hence no baby clothes. These, and milk bottles were bought at Falls Church on the way back and now the Smith, having named the anonymous infant William Wesley Smith, have taken definite steps to adopt him.

"Mr. Smith, Mother Smith, and myself are very happy at having the little fellow in our home," Mrs. Smith said yesterday. "We have often spoken of adopting a child."

Big TVA Coal Order Placed in Birmingham

Birmingham, Ala. July 20 (AP).—Authoritative sources revealed today that orders for steam coal totaling 1,700,000 tons had been placed in the Birmingham district by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The order was described in coal circles here as the largest ever booked for a similar purpose in the Birmingham area. It amounts to approximately 20 per cent of the annual production of the commercial coal mines in the State.

Weyland Brooks, Republican Senatorial nominee for Illinois; Representative Patrick (Democrat), of Alabama.

George Peek Gives Willkie Farm Program To Insure 'American Prices' for Products

By William B. Ardery.
Associated Press Staff Writer

Colorado Springs, July 20.—Wendell L. Willkie received a comprehensive outline of a new farm program today from George N. Peek, former Agricultural Adjustment Administrator, but the nominee made plain that Peek's was only one of many suggestions he would consider in drafting the farm section of his acceptance address.

Peek, who left the New Deal because of his disagreement with its reciprocal trade policies, read a lengthy memorandum on his views at Willkie's afternoon press conference.

Program Outlined

In brief, the former AAA administrator offered this program:

1. Secure protection of the American market for the American farmer.
2. An "American price for American commodities should be insured independent of export or world prices."
3. "Active and at times aggressive Government assistance will be necessary in negotiating for the disposal of surpluses in foreign trade."
4. Development of new uses for farm products.
5. A long range soil conservation program.
6. Farmer-owned and controlled cooperative organizations designed "to reduce the price spread between the producer and consumer."
7. Continuance of commodity loans "on a sound basis."
8. Retention of "desirable features" of existing farm legislation.

Willkie Asked Ideas

Willkie said he asked Peek to come here for a chat about farm problems because he understood the latter had a number of ideas on the subject.

He added he was "trying to get the viewpoint of a number of people on the agricultural situation" and that he would make his own decisions later.

Willkie did express interest in one statement by Peek—that if all wealth comes from productivity, then the emphasis should be placed on the production of wealth rather than on its restriction.

Prior to the luncheon conference with Peek, Willkie expressed gratification that Irvin S. Cobb, Charles Farwell, of New Orleans, and other Democrats said they would support him.

"My phone hasn't stopped ringing since the Democratic convention because of the important Democrats over the country saying they will come out for me," Willkie told his press conference.

Willkie released a letter of support from Booth Tarkington, author, who invited the nominee to visit him at his home in Maine.

250,000 State And Municipal Workers Affected

By the Associated Press

President Roosevelt yesterday signed the Hatch clean State politics bill which will drasticaly alter some aspects of the political campaign this year. By his action, the President made mandatory numerous alterations in political customs, including:

State or local employes, paid in whole or in part with Federal funds, may not engage in political activity.

Such big political party expenditures as the 1936 Republican outlay of almost $9,000,000 and the Democratic expense account of $5,650,000 are forbidden. The new limit is $3,000,000.

Contributions from individuals or organizations are limited to $5,000. (In 1936, Felix duPont contributed $134,000 to the G.O.P. In the same campaign, the United Mine Workers Union made a $500,000 loan to the Democrats.)

Advertising, such as the famous Democratic National Convention book space, may not be sold for political revenue nor may goods or commodities be purchased when that revenue goes into a political fund.

Those provisions, together with the original Hatch Act, banning Federal employes from pernicious political activity, combine to require sweeping change in campaign tactics this year. Both pieces of legislation were fought bitterly. Their author, Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, hailed enactment as a great progressive step. He predicted that politics will be further "purified" soon by authorizing Federal appropriations for the conduct of election campaigns.

The bill signed yesterday affects approximately 250,000 State and municipal workers paid from Federal funds—such as Social Security Board workers and certain highway employes.

The bill will be administered by the Civil Service Commission. Alleged violators may take their case to court but are not guaranteed a jury trial.

Granddaughter Of Lincoln Joins D. C. Willkie Club

Abraham Lincoln's granddaughter, Mrs. Jessie Lincoln Randolph, is one of the first to apply for membership in the District of Columbia Willkie-McNary Campaign Club, James A. Councilor, club president, announced yesterday.

Mrs. Randolph, daughter of Robert Todd Lincoln, former Secretary of War and Minister to England, is a native of Washington "and therefore is eligible for membership in the District organization," said Councilor.

Councilor announced appointment of Mrs. Cooper B. Rhodes, Young Republican leader, as secretary of the club. She succeeds Mrs. Louise Hunter Snow, who has been transferred to the Chicago headquarters of the Republican National Committee.

Salesmen Leave Today

Members of the Chrysler 100 Club, comprising 100 salesmen who had the best auto sales record for the past year, will assemble at the Wardman Park Hotel today for the beginning of their annual outing trip.

U. S. Worker Quits To Help Willkie

Roland L. Hill, auditor in the General Accounting Office, who claims to be the first Washingtonian on the Federal pay roll to bolt the Democrats to campaign for Willkie, said yesterday he was supporting the Republican nominee for the Presidency "because he's really a Democrat."

In a telegram to Willkie, Hill declared: "I am proud to say I am still on the pay roll, and in violation of the Hatch Act I am offering my most tireless efforts to elect you, a good Democrat, to the Presidency. Please command me." Hill's resignation is effective July 31.

He is former State director of the National Emergency Council in Minnesota. He said he hopes to begin organizing Willkie clubs throughout the country.

Vatican Paper Criticizes Nazi Refugee Policy

L'Osservatore Romano Says Germans Banned Church Aid to Belgians

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, July 20.—The Germans have refused to permit the apostolic nuncio in Belgium to perform "his religious mission" and help refugees, prisoners and other unfortunates, the Osservatore Romano states today in a notice placed as conspiciously as possible on the front page.

This tells that Msgr. Clemente Micara, titular archbishop of Apamea in Syria and Belgium nuncio, arrived in Rome this morning.

"We recall that in 1916, during the last European war, Msgr. Micara was secretary of the apostolic nunciature in Brussels," continues the notice. "He was then able freely to exercise his religious mission of Christian charity, with satisfaction to the Belgium authorities and to the Germans in occupation. It has not been possible for him to do so now."

In semiofficial Vatican circles this morning, it was stated that Herr Hitler's speech was being carefully studied, and it was particularly noted that Britain now has an opportunity of asking terms, so that a continuance of the war can be avoided. The implication is that Britain ought to surrender.

wide-spread air raids on shipping, harbors, power plants, warehouses and military positions from south England to Scotland; claimed the sinking of a 5,000-ton merchant ship and damage to three other merchantmen and a destroyer and reported the sinking of 24,700 tons of merchant shipping by a single U-boat.

It took cognizance of new British air raids in northern and western Germany last night.

The next few days will show, authorized persons asserted, how the British reaction to the Hitler speech, as pounded home by the radio campaign, is to be evaluated.

When the next step will come and of what it will consist, they reiterated, is solely up to Hitler.

Today the Fuehrer had a conference with Count Galeazzo Ciano, Mussolini's son-in-law and Italian foreign minister, who came to Berlin for yesterday's Reichstag session. It was, however, described as a courtesy call, since important Axis decisions were reached in earlier discussions at Berlin and Munich.

Ciano and his staff left for home at midnight, the German wireless said, after ceremonious farewells from German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop and high Nazi state and party functionaries.

There was no hint from German broadcasts or the press just what kind of a peace Hitler had to offer.

Only the highest of his associates are likely to know the nature of the campaign he would launch against Britain or how long he would wait.

But Berliners for weeks have observed that many large boats have disappeared from lakes in the vicinity of the capital.

From along the French, Belgian and Netherlands coasts come reports of lengthened and broadened airport runways.

Nazis Intensify Raids, Britain Strikes Back

100 Planes Battle Over Channel; R. A. F. Bombs Reich Bases

parachutist was seen fluttering down from an altitude of about 8,000 feet but whether he was from a German plane or from a R. A. F. machine was not stated and his fate was a mystery.

[German planes returned to the attack during the night, dropping bombs in northwestern England and killing one person and injuring several in a southwest coast town, United Press said.]

[British planes carried out a heavy bombardment of Copenhagen for 40 minutes early Sunday, International News Service reported. Danish shipyards and an airport were reported hit.]

Figures released by the ministry for home security today showed that since June 18 when large-scale German bombing raids against the United Kingdom began, 336 civilians have been killed and 476 seriously injured. The largest number of killed in any one locality on a single raid was 32.

Bremen, Emden and Wilhelmshaven were among the numerous points that came in for severe R. A. F. bombing attacks early this morning and last night, according to air ministry officials.

Keeping up their efforts to weaken as much as possible Germany's air strength, British fliers bombarded the big Focke-Wolf airplane factory at Bremen for more than an hour and a half, and battered the oil plant and piers at that important port.

R. A. F. raiders said they made direct hits on buildings forming part of the Focke-Wolf plant and ploughed up the airplane landing field with high explosives. One British raider reaching the scene shortly after the attack began saw what he first thought to be new buildings under construction, only to discover later, he said, that they were the foundations of buildings that had been pulverized by earlier R. A. F. arrivals.

The air base at Hage, just north of Emden, was also bombed and left "fully illuminated," the air ministry said. At Wilhelmshaven, R. A. F. raiders damaged docks and ship basins in spite of the particularly heavy antiaircraft fire and thick balloon defenses.

British officials said also that their bombers had set fire to the Dornier seaplane factories at Wismar, on the Baltic Sea, and at Wenzendorf, and the air bases at Nordeney, Texel, and the Island of Langeoog.

A synthetic gasoline plant at Gelsenkirchen which had been damaged in previous raids was set afire again, as was the oil refinery at Kamen. Railroad sidings at Essen and Oldenburg were bombed and main line tracks at South Recklinhausen and at Lunen were slashed.

En route homeward the raiders believed they shot down two German Messerschmitt-110 machines that tried to intercept them. Both of the enemy attackers, seemingly riddled with machine gun bullets, were last seen stalling or hurtling downward through the darkness toward the sea.

Just when the Bremen and Hamburg radio stations were due to broadcast late tonight another resume of Hitler's Reichstag speech of yesterday, they went off the air. The usual reason for sudden silence by these stations is that R. A. F. raiders are overhead.

[Preparing further for full-fledged Nazi invasion momentarily anticipated, Britain registered men of the 1907 category, estimated at 350,000, for the defense forces placed under the command of the energetic Gen. Sir Alan Brooke who has supplanted Gen. Sir Edmond Ironside in a high command shakeup, International News Service said.

[It was the third class called to the colors since July 1. Next Saturday the 1906 class—men of 33 and 34—will be registered, bringing the total available armed manpower in the British Isles up to 4,000,000 soldiers and reserves.]

Mexico Rivals Claim Vote Lead

Mexico City, July 20 (INS).—Gen. Jaun Andreu Almazan's campaign organization, P. R. U. N., tonight announced a total of 2,492,567 votes for Almazan in the presidential election of a fortnight ago.

Victory also was claimed for Gen. Manuel Avila Camacho, administration candidate—with about the same total of votes. Some 3,000,000 persons voted, but no official figures on the candidates' totals are available yet.

Troops Soon to Land In Britain, Says Rome

Italy Will Attack Possessions as Nazis Strike at Island

By the United Press

Rome, July 20.—Fascists tonight viewed German air attacks on Great Britain as preliminaries of a general offensive in which Nazi troops will strike at Britain while Italy attacks British Empire possessions.

From this offensive, they believed, Benito Mussolini and Adolf Hitler will emerge as arbiters of a "new order in Europe."

The newspaper Regima Fascista, of Cremona, warned Britain in an editorial that unless Prime Minister Winston Churchill orders surrender, the German army will be "forced to raze to the ground London and other principal cities. . . . A fate even worse than that of Warsaw and Rotterdam awaits these cities."

The authoritative political weekly, Relazioni Internazionale, said debarkation of German troops in England is only a question of days.

Sees War in "Final Phase"

"Italy," according to an editorial by Virginio Gayda, in the newspaper Giornale d'Italia, "is at present engaged in the difficult task of hammering at and tiring out British naval and colonial forces and withholding them from the defense of the British Isles in a moment of extreme need."

He added that Italy would strike at the British Empire in the Mediterranean.

The political and military situation of what Fascists call the "final phase" of the European war was analyzed by the Relazioni Internationale under four separate headings:

German action against England is already practically under way.

. . . the prelude has been aerial attack—landing of German troops on the island is now only a question of days.

Italy, with air and naval operations, has complete mastery of the Mediterranean. On land, in East and North Africa, operations are assuming a larger scale and a wider range.

In the Balkans there has been an easing of tension, especially after the recent talks in Berlin and Munich.

There has been much talk these last days of a new European order. "It is perhaps necessary to say that this new European order will come from the will of Mussolini and Hitler after victory."

Blockade Called Ineffective

Prime Minister Winston Churchill of England was warned by Gayda that the economic warfare of blockade was antiquated and no longer of any use.

"Men of London's ruling class," Gayda said, "can again raise their arrogant voices and hide the truth from their ignorant people, but they know what a great responsibility they assume."

The Italian press gave prominence to a wire sent by Premier Benito Mussolini to Gen. Francisco Franco, head of the Spanish state, on the occasion of the fourth anniversary of the Spanish civil war. Mussolini telegraphed:

"Fascist Italy is proud to have offered the blood of its legionnaires for the triumph of the Spanish cause. The blood shed by our legionnaires cements the indissoluble friendship of Italy and Spain."

Italy also acknowledged loss by gunfire yesterday of one of her crack cruisers, the Bartolomeo Colleoni, but general headquarters of the armed forces said that British naval forces had suffered heavily.

Sea Victory Claimed

In waters surrounding the Island of Candia (Crete) a battle of three hours occurred yesterday at dawn between the light cruisers Giovanni dele Bande Nere and Bartolomeo Colleoni, 5,000 tons each, and the British units comprising two cruisers of 7,000 tons of the Sydney type and four destroyers," the communique said.

"Notwithstanding the great superiority of the enemy forces, our cruisers engaged in batle, inflicting heavy losses. The cruiser Bartolomeo Colleoni was hit in a vital spot and immobilized. It sank fighting fiercely. A majority of the crew was believed to have been saved.

"Italian bombing units reached the enemy naval forces and repeatedly bombed them, scoring various hits on the cruisers. An enemy ship sank in flames. All of our planes returned to their bases."

In London yesterday the admiralty said that the Australian cruiser Sydney, accompanied by a small destroyer force, alone engaged the Italian cruisers. The admiralty, which said that the British had rescued survivors from the Bartolomeo Colleoni, said the other Italian cruiser at the scene of action had fled.)

Commons Get Biggest Budget In British History Tuesday

By the United Press

London, July 20.—Great Britain tonight prepared to face perhaps the largest war budget in her history—a budget which will shoot taxation to unprecedented levels and might conscript capital through compulsory loans.

Income taxes, which now take 37½ per cent of taxable incomes, are expected to be boosted another 7½ per cent.

On Tuesday, Sir Kingsley Wood, chancellor of the exchequer, will present to the House of Commons the first war budget of the Churchill government, now ten weeks old. It will be critically received since the preceeding two budgets were considered failures and resulted in dismissal "upstairs" to the House of Lords of Sir John Simon who was Neville Chamberlain's chancellor of the exchequer.

Chamberlain an Issue

Thus, if Wood makes no better showing than his predecessors, it is expected there will be another struggle over the issue "Chamberlain must go." The former prime minister is still lord president of the council.

Newspapers friendly to the chancellor of the exchequer believe he will raise the money for the budget on a 50-50 basis. Half by taxes, the other half by borrowing. Various economists writing in these papers have asserted that to borrow more than 50 per cent might mean inflation and to borrow less might mean needless hardships for taxpayers.

As usual, the total of the new budget will remain a secret until Wood reads his message before the House. But the British public, according to the newspapers is willing to go the limit with taxation in order to prevent inflation that might prove disastrous to the nation on the eve of threatened invasion.

Stamp Tax Likely

The primary task of the new budget is to produce efficient ways and means of bridging a colossal gap, amounting to roughly $5,728,000,000, which now exists between Britain's current annual revenue and her wartime expenditures.

Many think Wood will propose some lucrative novelty such as a stamp tax similar to the one which helped to drive the American colonies into the Revolutionary War. This tax would probably amount to one penny on each pound sterling transaction of any description. It is estimated it would raise $1,200,000,000 compared to the present unpopular tax on purchases which, even at the rate of 15 per cent, would raise only $400,000,000.

Police Boys Club Band Off to Camp For Fun, Practice

Two busloads of youthful musicians, members of the Police Boys' Club Band, left yesterday for Camp Major Ernest W. Brown, Scotland, Md., and two weeks of work and play.

"They're going to practice five hours or more a day, whether they like it or not," said Leon Brusiloff, the band's conductor. "I'm out to make real musicians of these kids, and all of them have talent."

Brusiloff said the band would stage several concerts at camp and would be out with new arrangements for the board of directors' gathering next Sunday, when a concert and picnic supper will be held at the camp.

This Is Bad Year For Forest Fires

The 1940 forest fire season in the West threatens to become one of the most severe in recent years due to widespread lack of rain, Roy Headley, chief of the Division of Fire Control of the Forest Service, said yesterday.

He said fires in national forests already totaled more than 7,400 this year as compared to 5,255 over a similar period last year. The greatest fire danger exists in the forests of Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada and Utah, he said. Most severely hit thus far this year are forests in Montana and northern Idaho, where lightning started more than 700 fires over last week-end.

Headley complimented the recent work of the Civilian Conservation Corps in which 2,100 of the 8,000 fire fighters were CCC boys.

British Land 545 Italians Saved From Sinking Cruiser

By the Associated Press

Alexandria, Egypt, July 20.—British men o' war steamed into Alexandria harbor today with 545 half-naked officers and men saved from the Italian cruiser Bartolomeo Colleoni, sunk in battle yesterday in the Aegean Sea.

The Italians, a British communique said, were rescued by British warships while Italian planes rained bombs on the scene of operations. Italian casualties were reckoned unofficially as not over 300. The captain was among those saved.

French Join in Cheers

Crews of British and French warships, anchored in the green waters of the western harbor, lined their decks to cheer the incoming vessels ocaring the prisoners.

It was a big day for Alexandria, celebrating the feat of the Australian cruiser Sydney and destroyers in sending the prize Italian vessel to the bottom of the sea.

Smiling nervously, the Italian officers and sailors walked gingerly down the gangplanks, many of them clad only in lifebelts and shorts.

They stepped onto the blazing bricks of Alexandria's quay and, facing internment for the rest of the war, extended right arms in the Fascist salute.

Some of them murmured, in broken English to their British rescuers: "Thank you."

Bands struck up "God Save the King."

The communique said the Italian cruiser was sighted early yesterday morning. The Italian, with a maximum speed of 40 knots, sped southwestward in an effort to escape.

"Our forces, however, made a determined attack and accurate fire from the Sydney caused vital hits in the Colleoni, which reduced her speed, enabling our destroyers to complete her destruction," said the official account.

Second Cruiser Hit

A second cruiser of the same class got away, after being hit several times.

One of the Sydney's officers said the companion cruiser "turned tail in a hurry, but the Bortolomeo Colleoni tarried long enough to answer our fire."

"One of our shells hit the boiler room of the Bartolomeo Colleoni. We continued our shelling, but the Italian commander ordered the crew to abandon ship because they had started stripping themselves of clothing and flinging themselves overboard into the sea, then crying for us to save them."

A torpedo in the magazine started the Italian cruiser down, he said.

"Then while we were picking up the Italian survivors, the Italian bombers came over and let loose everything they had.

"But we carried on with our efforts to rescue them.

"The Italian planes kept up their bombardment until nightfall."

Star of 'Four Sons' Has Fourth Son

Hollywood, July 20 (AP).—Film Actor Don Ameche, who recently completed a picture called "Four Sons," acquired his fourth son today.

The boy was born to Mrs. Ameche on the first anniversary of the birth of their third son, Thomas. The other children are Donald, 6½, and Ronald, 4½. The Ameche family now ranks with that of Bing Crosby (four sons) and Eddie Cantor (five daughters), as among the largest in the film colony.

War Reduces Suez Canal Wage Rates a Third

Copyright by New York Times

Cairo, Egypt, July 20.—Italy's entry into the war brought to a standstill operations of the Suez Canal, which has been one of the most profitable enterprises in the world. From average gross receipts of about £750,000 monthly, the Suez Canal Co.'s revenues have almost vanished.

Although it is officially stated that the largest part of the company's assets are in France, it is learned that large deposits are also in Britain and the United States, and the rest in Egypt.

About 5,000 persons have been permanently employed by the canal company in Egypt, besides many thousands of laborers hired by the day. The average salaries paid by the company have compared favorably with the highest in the world, but such salaries are gone, for the present at least.

Unable to draw on the funds in France and with almost no income here now, Baron L. de Benoist, the general agent of the company here, has worked out a scale of reductions, according to which the highest-paid officials will take cuts of more than 33 per cent and other employes in proportion. He has also ordered the closing of all the company's large, workshops leaving only those absolutely necessary, which means that the personnel of the closed shops will be dismissed and no more daily laborers will be hired.

The plight of the Suez Canal company affects the 200,000 inhabitants of four towns whose existence depends on the canal. Ismailia, where the administrative offices of the company for Egypt are located, is inhabited almost entirely by canal employes, their families and persons serving them. Port Said, Suez and Port Tewfik also live almost entirely on the business of the canal traffic and the canal personnel.

The company held a general shareholders' meeting in Paris on June 5, and decided to pay its dividends, but since these are payable in France, there seems no possibility of collecting them outside that country. The shares at present have no real market value.

France Expects Ruling On Government's Shift

Status of 1,500,000 Prisoners Also Due For Early Decision

Copyright by New York Times

Vichy, France, July 20.—Negotiations with the Germans regarding modifications of the armistice terms are entering the decisive phase. The two main points are connected with the removal of the government to Paris or Versailles, and the status of 1,500,000 war prisoners.

Regarding the government's removal, a decision one way or the other is expected next week. Andre Francois Poncet, newly appointed "minister for prisoners," already has begun his task.

Meanwhile, the nation waits for announcement of the comprehensive reconstruction plan for which all the decrees issued up to now merely laid the foundations.

Official reaction to Chancellor Hitler's speech is not obtainable, but it is no secret that the eventual reconstruction of Europe is under consideration in governing circles. One argument being urged for an early release of prisoners of war is that both the victor and the vanquished have an equal interest in the restoration of France's economic life. Under the armistice clauses, the prisoners are releasable only after peace has been signed, but it is pointed out that Germany is now freeing the Belgian prisoners, while Belgian refugees also are permitted to return to their homes.

There is, furthermore, general agreement that the reconstruction of Europe cannot be achieved without considering the Western Hemisphere. Consequently, President Roosevelt's renomination provokes much interest. Transmission restrictions forbid representative extracts from French editorials but the general tone is that Mr. Roosevelt represents American ideas on National defense in every aspect and the concensus is that he will be reelected.

Comment this evening on Britain and Chancellor Hitler's speech is guarded, as it must be in the circumstances. Both Le Temps and the Journal Des Debats following identical lines and come to the conclusion that if the British and Premier Winston Churchill stick to his guns, the end of this month will decide Europe's fate.

Censorship Regulations

Copyright by New York Times

Bordeaux, France, July 20.— Censorship regulations were made effective yesterday for the southwestern occupied area of France.

The regulations provide that newspapers, periodicals, moving pictures, theatrical productions and phonograph records must contain nothing likely to harm either the Reich or the French government. Especially it is emphasized that no stand must be taken against the policies of Marshal Henri Philippe Petain as chief of state of France, which must "be respected strictly and most scrupulously."

Publication of any information regarding the location, movements or equipment of the German armed forces is rigidly forbidden.

Foreign news must be taken exclusively from German official news agency dispatches, the German radio and the German-censored Havas reports.

The food outlook is improving slightly with the gradual resumption of railroad traffic.

Too Late for Hay Fever Inoculation

Those who are allergic to the unpopular ragweed are out of luck if inoculation is contemplated at this late date, Health Officer George C. Ruhland yesterday advised.

The department, he said, has received several calls from sufferers from what is commonly known as hay fever.

"The only effective relief now is to stay away from the ragweed, even if it means going out of town or to a section of the city that is free from the weed. Inoculations, to be successful, have to be given two or three weeks in advance of the season."

Listed among contributors was a benefit bridge party at Hotel 2400, $140; Daughters of St. Helen's Society, $60; members of National City Christian Church, $119.17; Morris Pan Bank, $100; Ourisman Chevrolet Co. employes, $75; Bank Women's Club of Washington, $25; Mrs. E. Cruising Middies In Hudson River For Week-end

New York, July 20 (AP).—Ten destroyers bearing midshipmen from the U. S. Naval Academy anchored in the Hudson River today off upper Manhattan.

The flotilla, on a training cruise, will remain here over the week-end. The midshipmen will have shore leave. No visitors will be permitted aboard.

The vessels left Annapolis last Tuesday for a month's coastal cruise. They will visit the Military Academy at West Point Tuesday and after a brief stay there they will proceed to Newport, R. I., and thence to Hampton Roads, Va. They are scheduled to return to Annapolis August 13.

Germans Set Up Own Courts in Netherlands

By the Associated Press

Amsterdam, July 20.—The German high commissioner in the Netherlands, Arthur Seysz-Inquart, decreed today establishment of German courts to try Dutch citizens who act against the German nation, people, party, individuals or property.

They also will try German subjects or former German citizens for any offenses they may commit.

The Dutch may be tried in these courts if they commit what are considered to be crimes against "the general interest," such as sabotaging food supply.

Colonial Officials Arrested

This is the first time that Netherlands legal processes have been affected by the German occupation.

Police in The Hague last night picked up Dutch colonial officials arrested in reprisal for alleged ill treatment of Germans interned in the Dutch East Indies.

How many were arrested was not disclosed. The German complaints were said to refer to about 2,000 interned persons.

These, a German spokesman has stated, were made to submit to "humiliating treatment," such as riding on third-class railway coaches with natives, being guarded by native soldiers and being made to clean their own rooms.

Mail to Indies Stopped

Mail to the East Indies has been stopped.

Rost Van Tonningen, a Dutch Nazi leader, was named commissioner to control the Social Democratic Workers Party, the Communist Paty and the Revolutionary Socialist Workers Party. These parties, Seysz-Inquart charged, "agitated from within against German national socialism." The workers, he said, will have a chance to organize under new leadership.

Mistreatment Denied

By the Associated Press

The Netherlands Legation in Washington said in a statement today that Germans interned in the Netherlands East Indies received food and sleeping accommodations equal to those of Europeans serving with the Indies' armed forces.

The statement was issued in reply to Nazi charges of mistreatment of German nationals and threats of reprisals against residents of occupied Holland.

It said the legation had communicated by telephone with the governor general of the Netherlands East Indies and was advised that the interned received ten cigarettes a day and that those without financial means were given pocket money for refreshments.

"The health of the interned Germans is so carefully guarded," the statement quoted the governor general, "that some of the German seamen are actually in better physical condition today than they were at the time of their internment."

'Knights of Road' Avoid Frederick—for Reason

Frederick, Md., July 20 (AP).—The ""grapevine" telegraph out of Frederick is working well these days and the "knights of the road" are giving the county a wide berth.

For word has spread that if you get into the Frederick County jail you might have to serve your sentence in work—and work on the roads at that. This has resulted said Sheriff Guy Anders, in a marked reduction in the number of transients landing in the "clink." Sheriff Anders said that recently most of the members of the road gang have been persons sentenced on motor vehicle charges.

U. S. Striving to Prevent Naval Battle at Martinique

State Department Tries to Mediate British and French Claims to 100 Planes Now on Carrier at Island in Neutral Zone

By Bertram D. Hulen.
Copyright by New York Times

The State Department is endeavoring to facilitate an amicable adjustment between Great Britain and France over the approximately 100 American-made airplanes on the French aircraft carrier Bearn at Fort de France, Martinique, but with what promise of success officials did not reveal yesterday.

The Department's interest was manifested yesterday when Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State, conferred separately with Count de Saint-Quentin, the French Ambassador, and the Marquess of Lothian, British Ambassador.

The former Allies are at loggerheads over the planes, each claiming title to them, while the State Department is active in the case because of apprehensions lest the British should be tempted to defy the Pan-American safety belt and other considerations and attempt to seize the planes forcibly.

The planes had been taken on the Bearn for delivery in France when the German victory forced the carrier to head for Martinique. Since then she has remained in port, with British warships watching offshore.

The French say they bought and paid for the planes and so own them. The British contend that just before the Franco-German armistice an arrangement was made whereby they assumed French assets and liabilities in connection with the purchase of war supplies in this country, that the planes were bought through the Allied purchasing board, and that they now own them.

Janice Logan Caught in France, Relatives Fear

Chicago, July 20 (INS).—Fear for the safety of Janice Logan, movie star who, according to word from Hollywood, is stranded in France, was expressed tonight by members of her family here.

Mrs. Phoebe Terbell, of Evanston, a sister, said her last word from Miss Logan was a telegram a few weeks ago expressing her intentions to go to France. Mrs. Terbell said the actress sailed immediately.

She left reportedly to be married to Jacques Zaholler, described as a French newspaperman. Tonight she was reported stranded in Paris, without any way of getting funds from home.

Goering Plays Host To Officers' Party

Berlin, July 20 (AP).—Adolf Hitler's 12 new field marshals temporarily set war aside this afternoon to celebrate at Herman Wilhelm Goering's palatial estate their promotions announced yesterday by the Fuehrer in his Reichstag address.

Goering himself, hitherto merely a field marshal, was named Reich's marshal of Greater Germany and was awarded the grand cross of the iron cross.

Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano of Italy was a guest of honor at the estate, Karin Hall.

Nazis Blacklist Mutual System

New York, July 20 (AP).—The Mutual Broadcasting System was blacklisted tonight by Dr. Otto Dietrich, Adolf Hitler's personal press chief.

Dietrich, in a cable from Berlin, banned MBS from broadcasting from Germany or German-controlled areas in Europe because 31 Pacific Coast stations cut off Hitler's 95-minute speech yesterday.

Arthur Whiteside, MBS production manager, cabled Dietrich that MBS supplied Hitler's full speech and that individual stations were free to control their own programs. He added that MBS had no programs scheduled from Germany until tomorrow night and expected the situation might be cleared up by that time.

"The final aim of Naziism is the overthrow of Christianity," he declared.

There is not a street in the town in which at least one family has not had an official notification that somebody is missing. However, a few days ago some people who had given up hope received word that their people now were designated as prisoners of war.

Bullitt Home With High Praise For Petain and French People

Refuses to Regard New Order as Fascist, Denies Laval Rules

Copyright by New York Times

New York, July 20.—William C. Bullitt, American Ambassador to France, returned to the United States today with praise for Premier Petain and the French people, and with disbelief that Petain's government rightly could be called a Fascist state. He also refused to put any faith in the suggestions that Vice Premier Laval was the real head of France's reconstruction administration.

Bullitt returned on the Dixie Clipper of Pan-American Airways after a delay of four days at Horta, the Azores, because of engine difficulty. He came as a courier to President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull, with whom, he said, his confidential communications had been cut off since June 12. He left Vichy on July 11, the day that Marshal Petain assumed the dictatorial rule of the new French state.

Colossal Task Ahead

Mr. Bullitt would not talk about the mistakes that France had made in the past—leading to the German victory—nor would he make any prediction as to the future, either of France or of Britain.

He talked of the German entry into Paris and of the air bombs that narrowly missed taking his life; and of the colossal task the Petain government faces in trying to restore system out of "desperate disorder."

He left LaGuardia Airport to spend the week-end at the home of his brother, Orville Bullitt, in Pennsylvania, and planned to go to Washington Monday.

The picture that Bullitt painted of France was that of a nation so thoroughly disorganized that it was in a state bordering on chaos, but only that of physical equipment.

Insists Petain Is Boss

"In France today there are 10,500,000 people on the roads, refugees from their homes," he said. "Bridges are gone, roads are choked, communications are poor or non-existent and there is no gasoline. France faces a problem of reconstruction that is one of the most difficult that ever confronted any nation.

"Marshal Petain is universally respected in France as he is throughout the world. He is doing his best to bring order out of desperate disorder—and I do not mean that the people are disorderly. As for the future, I do not want to say anything. First, I must speak to the President and to the Secretary of State."

In a question a reporter referred to France as a "Fascist state."

"I don't know if it is right to call it a Fascist state," Bullitt responded quickly. "Marshal Petain enjoys the universal respect and confidence of the people. He has a tremendous reputation and he is thoroughly honest and straightforward."

It was in response to another question which embodied the suggestion that Vice Premier Laval was the real boss that Bullitt asserted his belief on that point.

"Petain is absolutely the boss," he said. "He is trying to do his best in an extraordinarily difficult situation."

Regarding the Paris air raid in which bombs fell near him, Bullitt revealed that he had had a much narrower escape—than was previously reported. In earlier accounts the bomb had been described as a "dud." Bullitt said today:

"Fortunately it was a time bomb and it exploded an hour later."

The Empress Zita of Austria, who also arrived on the clipper with her 19-year-old daughter, the Archduchess Elizabeth, was greeted by the Archduke Otto of Hapsburg and by another son, the Archduke Felix.

Asked who she thought would win the European war, she said:

"Why, the democracies, of course."

In America the Empress Zita will be the guest of Calvin Bullock, a broker, at his country home in Royalstone, Mass.

Roosevelt Signs 2-Ocean Navy Measure

days to recuperate from the Chicago convention.

Funds to begin construction of the 200 new vessels were not provided in the bill signed yesterday, but a $178,000,000 appropriation is included in a $936,176,540 bill on which a House committee is scheduled to commence hearings tomorrow.

Hearings will begin tomorrow also on President Roosevelt's request of July 10 for $4,848,171,957 in appropriations and contract authorizations for the Army and Navy to assure "total defense" for the United States.

Training Bill Delayed

The Senate Military Affairs Committee had hoped to have a compulsory training bill ready to report with the reconvening of Congress after the Democratic convention, but Chairman Sheppard (Democrat), Texas, said it would be delayed.

The committee is engaged in redrafting the Burke-Wadsworth bill calling for registration and selective training of all men between 18 and 65 years of age. The revised bill will incorporate changes proposed by the Army and Navy. Sheppard said it would be ready shortly.

Before the naval expansion program can be pushed to top speed, Navy officials said, additional ship construction facilities will have to be provided at both Navy and private yards.

Expansion Encouraged

Considerable amounts for new shipways have been voted, as well as Congressional permission for contract terms intended to encourage expansion of building capacity and speed. The Navy expansion bill itself authorized expenditure of $150,000,000 for increased facilities.

It is expected that essential elements of the program will be the negotiation of contracts without waiting for competitive bids, as recently authorized by Congress, and the duplication of ships already built or building to save time in planning and procurement.

On July 1, the Navy had 188 vessels of 893,758 tons being built—including 24 provided in the regular 1941 appropriation act and 22 in a 11 per cent expansion bill previously voted.

On top of those will be added the 70 per cent expansion, which provides 100,000 tons of auxiliary vessels, miscellaneous escort vessels and a minimum of 15,000 Navy planes, in addition to the 200 combat vessels.

When finished, the Navy will have 35 battleships (several of them super-dreadnaughts of 45,000 tons), 20 aircraft carriers, 88 cruisers, 378 destroyers and 180 submarines—a total of 701.

British Bombers Fire Italian Bases In Ethiopia, Libya

Copyright by New York Times

Cairo, Egypt, July 20.—Bombers of the South African air force struck heavily at Neghelli Airdrome in Ethiopia today, sent flaming gasoline from an exploding tank onto nearby buildings and airplanes and left fires raging through the camp, a Royal Air Force communique announced. One Savoia bomber was hit.

More gaping holes were blown in already damaged hangars during an attack on Agurida, near Macaaca, Eritrea. Three grounded Savoia bombers were damaged.

More Italian supplies went up in smoke at El Gubbi, Libya, when bombers started five fires. Italian shipping in Tobruk Harbor was damaged by direct hits, but the extent of the damage was not ascertained.

Italian fliers raided strong British fortifications at Mersah Matruh, on the Egyptian coast, day and night, Thursday and Friday and met resistance from antiaircraft fire and intercepting planes.

During one attack a big Italian S-79 bomber was seen to twist to the earth and crash in the desert near the British camp.

Farley to Resign Friday, Chicago Paper Reports

Chicago, July 20 (INS).—Postmaster General James A. Farley will tender his resignation to President Roosevelt Friday in Washington, the Chicago Herald-American will say in a copyright story tomorrow.

Claiming to have received its information from unimpeachable sources, the newspaper will state that Farley will not make his resignation public, but will leave the announcement to be made by Mr. Roosevelt. Mayor Edward J. Kelly, of Chicago, was boomed as Farley's successor, the Herald-American will say.

Earlier this week Farley announced his resignation, effective August 17, as chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

Newsmen Get Bodyguards In Shanghai

State Department Asks Report of Attack On N. Y. Times Writer

By Hallett Abend

Shanghai, July 20.—Following a week of terrorism against American, British and Chinese newspapermen here in Shanghai, the International Settlement authorities today took measures for their protection.

ABEND

J. P. Powell, American editor-owner of the China Weekly Review, has been persuaded to accept a day and night personal bodyguard; Carroll Alcott, the American newsman and radio commentator, who particularly irked both the Japanese and the Nanking regime, has likewise been accorded protection and has been persuaded to wear a 20-pound bullet-proof vest, which, with the temperature above 100 and humidity at 96, is costing heavily in discomfort.

At noon today and without having been asked, the chief of the Settlement police, assigned armed Chinese constables in four-hour shifts, night and day, to guard the New York Times office and my personal apartment. The police are also urging that I constantly go armed, and that I employ a White Russian bodyguard, but this has not been done.

The Japanese today made no move in connection with the armed robbery with violence of my apartment early this morning by two civilian-clad Japanese, except that Consul General Miura, Ken Tsurumi, the embassy councillor, and Lieut. Col. Saito, the Japanese army spokesman at press conferences here, exressed their personal regrets over the outrage, but carefully explained they were unable to make any official expression until an investigation had been completed.

U. S. Awaits Report

The State Department is watching closely the case of Hallett Abend, New York Times correspondent, who was attacked in his apartment in Shanghai, Friday, by Japanese gunmen, but is awaiting further reports from the American consulate in Shanghai before announcing what action may be taken beyond the protest promptly lodged by the consulate with the Japanese authorities. Facts and circumstances of the case are being compiled in Shanghai.

Japanese Ship Yields $81,000 In Narcotics

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, July 20.—United States customs agents seized 17 pounds, 3 ounces of narcotics aboard a Japanese freighter today in a raid which the State narcotics chief hinted would have international ramifications and involve contraband worth more than $1,000,000. A Japanese was arrested.

Paul E. Madden, chief of the California Narcotics Enforcement Division, that the narcotic seizure (cocaine) was the largest "in a long, long time." It would be valued "wholesale" at $81,000 and probably would bring well above $200,000 in illegal street sales, he added.

Madden said the Japanese, Yoshitomo Wada, 38, was seized by customs agents in the engine room of the Nanman Maru, which docked from the Orient, via Los Angeles, late yesterday.

"He tried to throw a bag of the stuff he had on him as the agents made for him," Madden related, "but they saw it strike a bulkhead and recovered it."

Madden intimated further revelations and additional arrests were expected within two days and asserted the amount involved "probably will go up to $1,500,000."

Pretrial Court Speeds Justice in District

New Division Enables Tribunal to Handle Twice as Many Cases in 1939 as in '38, 2,237 to 1,074, Justice Laws' Report Notes

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Through success of its modern pretrial hearing division, the District Court did twice as much work last year as it did the year before.

Last October 1, the court was lagging 23 months behind its trial docket. Yesterday, the lag had been cut to 15 months for jury cases and eight months for nonjury cases. The rate of progress promised that the court would be virtually current by the end of the next judicial year, June 30, 1941.

Justice Bolitha J. Laws, who sat in the Pretrial Division during its first year, which ended June 30, analyzed the situation in his report to Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat and the associate justices of the court.

2,237 Cases in 1939

The Court, with 11 justices sitting, disposed of 1,074 cases in the court year 1938. In the year 1939, just ended, the Court, with only one more justice on the bench, disposed of 2,237 cases. Justice Laws found that "a large part of the acceleration of the calendar has been due to the compromising of cases."

Such settlements are part of the function of the Pretrial Division. The effect of its work was shown by the fact that in the court year of 1938, there were 755 settlements without trial, while in 1939 the number rose to 1,288. Of this total, it was apparent from the records that 570 were accomplished through the pretrial method.

Several factors operated together for many years to bog down the District Court so deep in unfinished work that a citizen had to wait 23 months after his case was ready for trial to obtain a hearing.

Peculiar Conditions Here

Unlike any other American city, Washington has only one court of general jurisdiction to do the work handled elsewhere by a dual setup of State courts and Federal courts. To this double burden is added a considerable volume of legal disputes peculiar to the seat of the National Government.

This "national litigation" includes suits against the Postoffice Department, the Veterans Administration, the Patent Office, the many New Deal agencies whose orders are questioned by persons affected.

An increase in the number of justices was authorized by Congress two years ago, and accomplished some lightening of the burden. Nearly two years ago, the Supreme Court promulgated new and simplified rules of civil procedure, which offered many short cuts and did away with much cumbersome, time-wasting routine inherited from the common law of England, and discarded in that realm generations ago.

New Rules Affected

However, the new rules were far from a complete solution of the problem of nearly 5,000 cases, docketed as ready for trial, which burdened the court. Against these the justices launched a method authorized by the new rules, the pretrial hearing procedure which has worked great reforms in several States.

Justice Laws made an elaborate investigation of the pretrial system in England and the United States. He sat with pretrial judges in Boston and Detroit. A year ago he was assigned by his colleagues to inaugurate the method in Washington.

The pretrial justice hears the lawyers on both sides of a case informally, finding out by questioning on what points they can agree. In most law suits, there are very few issues actually in dispute. But the old practice was for the defendant to "deny everything."

Time Wasted Uselessly

If the case went to trial on that basis, precious hours were wasted "proving" things that manifestly were true. Thus, a man suing for damages for a broken leg he suffered in a traffic accident might spend the time of the court proving by sworn testimony that he lost so many days' work, that his salary was so much, that his hospital bill was so much, that he spent so many days in the hospital, etc.

Not only was the time of judge, jurors, lawyers and court officials thus expended to no purpose, but those unfortunate enough to be witnesses spent weary hours, often days, waiting at the court to give under oath a few sentences of testimony on obvious facts.

Under the pretrial system, attorneys, guided by the pretrial justice, found themselves able to agree on many of these pertinent facts. Thus, in a damage suit, the hospital and medical costs, the time lost from employment, etc., would be settled at pretrial, leaving the trial court only one simple issue to settle, that is, Whose fault was it?

This type of treatment was accorded by Justice Laws in 957 pretrials on the last court year. His division signed also 520 other court orders. He heard 71 motions, and on 6 of them gave rulings which settled the cases in which they arose.

The pretrial division proved to be an ideal forum for use of a still more powerful judicial method, that of settlement by compromise. There were 317 cases settled on the pretrial calendar and 253 others settled between the pretrial hearings and the day they were set for trial.

For the success of the pretrial division, Justice Laws gave much credit to the bar. "It is due to counsel who have participated in this new procedure," he remarked in his report, "to say that in large part the good results which have been obtained have been accomplished by their full cooperation."

U. S. 'Demanding Compulsory Army Training'—Knox

Manchester, N. H., July 20 (AP).—Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox said today that "the country as a whole is urgently demanding some form of compulsory military training" and that there is "every prospect" that Congress would approve such a program when it reassembled.

The Colonel said such procedure was the only democratic way for a democracy "to organize its defenses so that the burden falls equally on rich and poor alike."

Knox said the Navy was making "tremendous progress in speeding up the construction of ships on the ways and expanding the capacity for building other ships.

"Meanwhile," he continued, "I have let millions of dollars worth on contracts for construction on land of barracks and docks. "We are doubling our armor plant capacity and expanding the personnel in order to handle the large increase that has been authorized."

'Alfalfa Bill' Murray Comes Out for Willkie

Oklahoma City, July 20 (AP).—William H. (Alfalfa Bill) Murray, who sought the Democratic nomination for President in 1936, pledged his support to Wendell Willkie today in a telegram to the Republican nominee.

The former Governor, who stirred up a rumpus in 1932 by introducing Alf M. Landon when the Republican standard bearer came here for a campaign speech, wired Willkie:

"I pledge you my support for President and for a Congress to assist you, for I will not vote for any man for a third term."

Workers Alliance Pickets District WPA

More than 30 members of the District Workers Alliance picketed WPA headquarters at 2324 F street northwest yesterday for half an hour in protest against general reductions in WPA rolls.

Second of 3 Jail-Breaking Bandits Caught

Survivor of Two Kansas Gun Fights Surrenders in Highway

By the Associated Press

St. Joseph, Mo., July 20.—Ivan Sullivan, survivor of two Kansas gun fights and a suspect in Nebraska and Minnesota bank robberies, surrendered on a highway today—second of three marauding fugitives to fall captive in less than 24 hours.

A remark credited to Sullivan by a hostage on his last flight led officers to speculate that the third member of the trio which fled the Fort Madison, Ia., penitentiary June 22 might be dead.

Lowell Haenze, 27, Sleepy Eye, Minn., who escaped with Sullivan, was wounded and captured yesterday.

Sullivan fled in the car of Francis Messick, farmer, forcing Messick to accompany him. As they drove they heard on the car radio that Haenze had been shot. Believing him killed, Messick said Sullivan told him:

"Well, a few days ago there were three of us. Now I'm the only one left."

Forrest Estes, 36, Mountain Home, Ark., was the third man in the Iowa break.

Sullivan, 29, of Trenton, Mo., had eluded Atchison, Kans., officers in a gun fight this morning only a few hours before he was captured across the Missouri River.

"Why don't you shoot me?" he asked the two Missouri highway patrolmen who arrested him as he stood beside the highway. "They've been shooting at me all night."

Officers said the man was armed with an automatic pistol and carried $1,956 in a money belt. Haenze had $1,800 in his pockets. Police said Sullivan admitted participation in the holdup of a Diller, Neb., bank yesterday.

He was turned over then to the Federal Bureau of Investigation at Kansas City. FBI officials said they probably would make no decision on his disposition until Monday.

He is sought not only by Nebraska and Minnesota officers for bank robberies but also by Iowa officials, who charge the three fugitives tried July 8 to engineer a second Fort Madison break from the outside. A guard and a prisoner were killed in that abortive escape effort.

Adm. C. F. Howell Succumbs at 59

Rear Adm. Charles Frederick Howell, 59, United States Coast Guard, retired, died yesterday at Ansonville, Pa., where he purchased a farm two weeks ago, the Associated Press reported.

Adm. Howell was born at Perth Amboy, N. J., and was retired July 1 from the Coast Guard, after 14 years service. Ansonville was the home of his wife, the former Mary E. Leonard.

Funeral services will be held here Tuesday, with burial in Arlington Cemetery.

SHO' AM HOT—Espey Thompson, 9, of 421 Fifth street southeast, found a good place to cool off in the horse trough at Fourth street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast

Georgetown Hospital.

Also fainting from the heat were James Clarke, 76, stricken at his home, 1673 Wisconsin avenue northwest, and treated at Georgetown Hospital; Frank Bonnet, 45, address unknown, taken to Emergency Hospital when found on the sidewalk of Pennsylvania avenue near Fifteenth street northwest, and Joseph Hackerson, 34, of 1300 Fourth street northwest, treated at Casualty Hospital.

Downtown hospitals reported many other minor heat cases were given first aid treatment and dismissed.

Yesterday's maximum temperature here, highest for July 20 since 1935, was accompanied by a comparatively high relative humidity.

At 7:30 a. m. the humidity was 69. After falling to 42 at 1:30 p. m., it rose again to 58 at 7:30 p. m.

The mercury climbed steadily from a low of 74 at 4:30 a. m., then began dropping ever so slowly shortly before 4 p. m. The forecaster promised generally fair weather for today and tomorrow, with little change in temperature.

Meanwhile, highways leading out of the capital were clogged, and little activity was noted in the largely evacuated city last night.

Temperatures of 100 or more were common in Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Arizona, Missouri and the Texas panhandle. Only northern Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota were comparatively cool after local showers.

Corn in Nebraska, now in the critical growing stage, began to wilt in the fourth straight day of 100-degree weather.

Tundall, S. Dak., recorded 107 degrees. Other cities in the 100-degree bracket included Kansas City, Amarillo, Tex., and Charles City, Iowa.

Washington's mean temperature of 85.3 was 8.5 degrees above normal. The maximum was 10.3 degrees above normal.

Soldier Shot After Wounding Officer in Flight From Post

By the United Press

Morrisville, Vt., July 20.—A United States Army major was shot and his alleged assailant was wounded late today after a searching party had captured two soldiers who escaped from sentries at Fort Ethan Allen a few hours earlier.

Maj. J. K. Mitchel was shot in the mouth allegedly by B. C. Bevins, 19, a private in the Quartermasters Regiment at the fort, who in turn was wounded in the leg as he sought to battle his way to freedom through the posse.

Also seized was George E. Sweetser, 19, a private in the Third Cavalry and Bevins' companion in the escape.

According to an official announcement, the pair fled the fort early today and traveled to their homes in this Northern town.

A searching party led by Maj. Mitchel and augmented by State police captured the men in woods near the village.

The pair were taken to Bevins' home where he allegedly obtained permission to enter a bedroom. According to Army officials, Mitchel followed Bevins into the room and was dropped by a pistol bullet that entered his open mouth and pierced his throat.

Bevins, it was said, leaped from a window and attempted to escape the armed sentries stationed outside the house. Several shots were fired before Bevins dropped with a bullet in his leg.

Fifth Column To Be Topic Of Parley Here

U. S. State Officials To Meet in Justice Department, Aug. 5-6

Means of combatting a possible fifth column in the United States and preserving civil liberties will be discussed at a Federal-State conference on law enforcement problems of national defense here August 5 and 6, the Department of Justice announced yesterday.

Sectional discussion groups of the conference, meeting at the Department of Justice Building, will make reports on:

Protection and preventive measures relating to national defense property.

Treatment of espionage, sedition, propaganda, mob violence, racial attacks, violations of civil liberties, interference generally with effective operation of law enforcement and national defense, and civilian cooperation.

Treatment of aliens, their registration and their position in the communities and industry.

Machinery for exchanging and considering proposals for administrative cooperation and new legislation.

Public education to obtain general cooperation of citizens with Federal and State governments.

The conference will open at 10 a. m. August 5 in the great hall of the Department of Justice with a message from President Roosevelt and a greeting from Attorney General Robert H. Jackson.

The "opening statement" by Gov. William H. Vanderbilt, of Rhode Island, conference chairman, will be followed by remarks by John Lord O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General in charge of the War Emergecy Division in 1917 and 1918, and J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Sectional meetings will be held on the afternoon of the opening day, and their reports will be submitted the following day.

The conference will be concluded with talks by Judge Richard Hartshorne, president of the Interstate Commission on Crime; Ellwood J. Turner, chairman of the Council of State Governments and Speaker of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and Lawrence C. Jones, attorney general of Vermont and president of the National Association of Attorneys General.

Wallace Won't Quit Cabinet Job

his summer home at Hyde Park, N. Y.

Speculation that Representative Marvin Jones (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, might be appointed to succeed Wallace, was questioned by friends of the Texan. They pointed out that Jones had received a lifetime appointment to a judgeship on the United States Court of Claims.

Because of President Roosevelt's recent selection of two Republicans to be Secretaries of War and Navy, some Congressmen suggested that Representative Hope (Republican), of Kansas, ranking Republican on the House Agriculture Committee, might be offered the place.

Sugar Bowl Rebels

New Orleans, July 20 (AP).—The split among Louisiana Democrats over Secretary Wallace's nomination for Vice President widened into direct action tonight with the announcement of David W. Pipes, jr., that he was a Republican candidate for Congress.

Pipes, a life-long Democrat and nationally known sugar planter of Houma, was the second to announce withdrawal from the State's anciently solid Democratic ranks within 24 hours.

Charles A. Farwell, spokesman for the American Sugar Cane League, last night pinned on a "Willkie for President" button, and said "the Republicans are Louisiana's only hope."

Pipes, in announcing his candidacy, said he would seek the seat held by Representative Robert L. Mouton, Democrat, of the Third District, which produces 64 per cent of the crop in Louisiana's $150,000,000 sugar industry.

State's "Worst Enemy"

"I haven't deserted the Democratic Party," the widely known planter said. "The Democratic Party has deserted us in the selection of Wallace, worst enemy Louisiana ever had."

His candidacy was welcomed by John E. Jackson, Republican national committeeman for Louisiana and Southern member of the Wendell Willkie Presidential advisory committee.

"Louisiana is going Republican this time," Jackson said, adding that the sugar belt revolt was inevitable "after years of what amounted to persecution of this once loyal Democratic section by a Democratic National Administration."

Both Pipes and Farwell charged Wallace's restriction quotas and plough-up campaigns have retarded progress of the State's sugar industry in favor of foreign crops.

Governor Won't Bolt

But tonight in Baton Rouge Gov. Jones of Louisiana, so outspoken at the Chicago convention in his criticism of Secretary Wallace, declared he would fight for the Democratic ticket.

"I want to tell the world I'm a Democrat," the Governor said. "I'm for Franklin D. Roosevelt for President. Any report about my being for the candidate of the utilities company is made out of whole cloth."

The Louisiana sugar district revolted against the Democratic Party under Woodrow Wilson in 1916, and elected Judge Whit P. Martin, of Tibodaux, to Congress on the Progressive (Bull Moose) ticket.

Red Cross Ship Only U. S. Vessel in Europe

The Maritime Commission reported yesterday that all United States merchant ships were out of the European combat zone with the exception of one vessel.

The last vessel, the commission said, was the McKeesport, now unloading supplies for the American Red Cross at the French Mediterranean Port of Marseille. The McKeesport is expected to leave the Mediterranean for the United States, without cargo, sometime this week. The Exmoor, another American ship, cleared Gibraltar Friday.

Band Conductor One of Cleveland's 'Musical Hrubys'

John J. Hruby, conductor of the famous Cathedral Latin Band of Cleveland, Ohio, which will play a special concert at the District of Columbia War Memorial tomorrow at 7:30 p. m., is a member of a family long known to the Buckeye metropolis as the "Musical Hrubys."

HRUBY

Two of his brothers are members of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra. Six brothers and two sisters teach music. In addition to conducting the Cathedral Latin Band, Hruby is himself a member of the Cleveland Symphony and a composer.

The band is stopping over in Washington en route to the New York World's Fair, where they will represent the State of Ohio in a special concert.

300,000 to Hear Willkie Speech At Huge Picnic

Chicago, July 20 (INS).—Homer E. Capehart, a Fort Wayne (Ind.) manufacturer, sat in his Union League Clubroom today and told of the plans he has made for the greatest picnic America ever had.

The picnic will be for the 300,000 persons expected to jam-pack little Elwood, Ind., early next month to hear Elwood's favorite son, Wendell L. Willkie, accept the Republican nomination for President.

As Capehart, chairman of the official notification committee, unfolded his plans, the figures he quoted bordered on the stupendous.

One caterer will have 25,000 box lunches ready to sell at the 60-acre park, where the main celebration will be held. And there are 150 concessions planned for the park. Another 100 concessions will be spread through the little town of 12,000 people, a town which couldn't possibly handle the 300,000 people with its own facilities.

Even the 60-acre park will be expanded for the picnic. Fields from five farms surrounding the park have been rented to furnish a gigantic parking space, big enough for 50,000 cars.

Twelve hundred police officers, American Legion men and Boy Scouts will direct the greatest flow of traffic Elwood ever saw. Traffic control will be maintained for a radius of 20 miles around the town.

At least 300 bands or musical units will be on hand. Elephants will parade. Vaudeville acts will come and go in a continuous stream to give the picnickers constant entertainment. This entertainment will be carried to the crowd by 150 loudspeakers.

Three Defense Steps Urged By Chamber

Government Asked To Remove Obstacles To Private Initiative

By International News Service

James S. Kemper, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, yesterday repledged American business to its full share of the rearmament burden, but asked for prompt removal of Government obstacles "blocking industrial initiative and retarding productive effort."

In a message to the 1,600 units of the national chamber, Kemper urged them to use their collective influence to prevail upon Congress, in face of heavy taxation measures, to actuate the following three-point program:

Take immediate steps to eliminate unnecessary public expenditures.

Eliminate present handicaps to production of essential war materials on an economical basis.

Remove obstacles which tend to block industrial initiative and retard productive effort.

Kemper wrote:

"The present Congress has voted the largest appropriations ever made when this country was not at war. A substantial part of these appropriations is for national defense.

"In terms of material and equipment, defense can best be assured by approaching the situation calmly and realistically, with a full appreciation that the job should not be magnified through hysterical fear.

"In every consideration of the mounting cost of Government, it always should be remembered that the maintenance of Federal credit is of the utmost importance. Failure to recognize this might bring to our country consequences that could approximate our unfortunate participation in any foreign war, regardless of its outcome.

"Business is already and willing to do its part in meeting any national problem. Congress and the Government's administrative agencies can facilitate the progress of the preparedness program.

"The time to do it is now."

ABC Board Urged To Ban Price-Cutting

Liquor Men's Group Gives List of Demands At Eberharter Hearing

Elimination by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board and the District Commissioners of "vicious and cut-throat" price slashing of liquor was advocated yesterday by Milton S. Kronheim, as the board opened hearings on the Eberharter report.

Representing the Beverage Industry Committee, Kronheim said it is within the power of the Commissioners and the A. B. C. Board to regulate prices, failure of which will bring "financial disaster" to retail dealers and "possibly serious social consequences" to the community."

Further hearings on the Eberharter report, which recommended widespread reform within the local liquor industry as a result of a Congressional investigation, will be held early next month, it was announced by Chariman Thomas E. Lodge of the A. B. C. Board following yesterday's session.

Kronheim said his organization, which he claimed was composed of some 400 local dealers, went on record favoring the following proposals: Ban on use of prices in liquor advertising; limit sign advertising on licensed premise to 10 square feet, prohibit signs to be illuminated during closing hours; grant right to appeal A. B. C. decisions to the United States District Court; permit sale of beverages to be consumed on the premises between Saturday midnight and 2 a. m. Sunday; permit drinking at the bar while standing; registration of contracts between wholesales and retailers with the board; close package stores at 10 p. m. week days and midnight on Saturdays, and days before holidays, and use of a partition to separate liquor displays in combination stores during time when its sale is prohibited.

Leo A. Rover, former United States attorney, representing the District Retail Liquor Dealers Association, advocated display in retail stores of the actual cost price of liquor in order to eliminate price cutting. He said his group would approve a regulation whereby liquor could not be sold for less than 15 per cent above the cost price.

Rover slapped at the "deals" which are made between wholesaler and retailer where the retailer, by purchasing in larger quantities, is able to buy liquor at a lower cost and thereby place the product for sale at a reduced price. He said his group was opposed to use of prices in liquor advertising and would like to see a ban on all forms of handbills and advertising in "neighborhood" papers, which "operate on a nonpaid circulation."

David Hornstein, appearing for the newly organized Independent Food Distributors, Inc., said his group will submit their recommendations by July 30. He said the organization was composed of grocers, having either a class "A" or "B" license, who are aligned with the District Grocery Stores, United Food Stores, Nationwide, Goodwill and Capital Food Stores.

Milton Kronheim, jr., asked the board to make its decisions on applications "within a week's time." He said his clients "sometimes can't understand the delay," while awaiting approval or denial of an application.

3 CCC Lads Burned, One Fatally, in Forest Fire

Boise, Idaho, July 20 (AP).—One Civilian conservation Corps enrollee was burned to death and two others were burned severely as wind whipped a fire along a 3½-mile front in the foothills of the Boise Mountains.

Joseph J. Galluzzo, 19, of Reading, Ohio, was trapped on a hillside by shifting wind. The blaze, which Oscar Mink, Grazing Servcie fire dispatcher, said started in grass and brush, covered more than 4 miles. Approximately 350 men were rushed to the area by the Forest Service, Grazing Service and Bureau of Reclamation.

2 Saved Here As Navy Plane Falls in River

Engine Ripped Out; Pilot and Passenger Rescued by Boat

A Navy pilot and a Bureau of Standards scientist escaped serious injury yesterday when their Navy seaplane plunged into the Potomac 50 yards above Highway Bridge.

Lieut. S. A. Johnson, pilot, and Donald Ross, of 2413 M street northwest, his passenger, were pulled from the wreckage by occupants of a pleasure boat owned by Ralph Smith, of the Airport Basin. Lieut. Johnson was at Naval Hospital last night for observation and X-ray treatment, though neither he nor Ross was believed to have suffered more than a severe shaking up.

The plane, which had taken off from the Naval Air Station at Anacostia, plunged into the water with such force the engine was ripped from its mountings. Its motor apparently failing, it staggered toward the bridge, clipped the tops of trees lining the speedway at East Potomac Park and narrowly missed several automobiles before it fell into the river, nose first.

"With my wife and 9-month-old son, Richard, I was driving along the speedway toward Hains Point when suddenly we heard the roar of an engine that seemed to be directly overhead," said an eyewitness, C. H. King, of Hyattsville, Md.

"A moment later we saw the plane, its motor sputtering, strike a tree only a few yards away and then head out over the river. It came down with an awful crash, bounced upward once, then struck again."

By that time King had leaped out of his car and began shooting pictures.

Milton Chase, of 2322 High street southeast, another eyewitness, said he could see the pilot struggling with the controls.

Citizens' Units Indorse Fight On Gas Levy

A. A. A. Announces Results From Poll Of D. C. Organizations

"Almost unanimous" support by Washington's major citizens' organizations in its fight against the proposed gasoline tax increase was announced yesterday by the District Division of the American Automobile Association.

A poll showed the Federation of Citizens Associations, the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, the District Federation of Women's Clubs, the District Traffic Advisory Committee, the Housekeepers' Alliance "and numerous citizens associations, parent-teacher associations and similar groups" indorsed the A. A. A.'s opposition, according to Washington I. Cleveland, manager of the local organization.

"Just what powerful influences have been brought to bear on the House District Committee to cause it to call hearings on a bill which it had previously relegated to the scrap heap have not been definitely uncovered," said Cleveland. "However, an effort will be made at the August 6 hearings, at which the motorists of the District will be represented by the A. A. A., to determine what those influences are; whether the oil dealers in nearby Maryland and Virginia are responsible for the proposal or if some other group is putting the pressure behind this measure."

Dies Told Communists Have Data to Cripple N.Y.

Beaumont, Tex., July 20 (AP).—The Dies Committee heard today that New York City could be rendered swiftly uninhabitable through information obtained by the Communist Party from a WPA writers project.

George Hurley and Steve Birmingham, investigators for the House Committee Investigating Unamerican Activities, told Chairman Dies (Democrat), of Texas, the project had unearthed complete information of New York's nerve centers of industry, communication, transportation and food and water supply.

Utilization of this mass of photographic and charted material would mean, possibly, demoralization of the great city within a space of hours, the witnesses asserted.

In New York, however, Lieut. Col. Brehon B. Somervell, WPA administrator, said "no one need be alarmed" at the testimony, adding the writers project had obtained only information readily available to anyone interested.

The material pertained to water supply, subways, food and milk centers, electricity, railroads, gas supplies, bridges, water mains, terminals and police and fire department signal systems.

Later in the day Dies, who is conducting a series of one-man hearings in Texas, turned again to reports of Communist infilteration in State-supported schools.

The report added that active Communist units had been established in many Texas cities and that the party aimed to build a permanent independent labor political party in this State, "one which could be used to great advantage" long after the coming State election.

Fox also told the committee that the Communists were winning recruits among Mexican citizens by promising to return to them the land "taken from them" by the United States—when "the revolution comes."

Anticancer Plan Sponsored by D. C. Control Group

The District Medical Society's cancer control committee yesterday announced its approval of a permanent educational and preventive control program in which both public and private agencies would participate.

"The program not only contemplates education of the public but provides necessary facilities which will aid in reducing mortality in the District of Columbia due to cancer," said Dr. Eugene R. Whitmore, chairman of the committee.

Highlights of the plan include:

Establishment of a cencer control bureau in the Health Department.

Appointment of an advisory council to the health officer composed of physicians, dentists, hospital executives and representatives of the Women's Field Army.

Close cooperation with the American Society for the Control of Cancer.

Establishment of a tumor clinic at Gallinger Hospital with facilities for biopsies, pathological diagnosis, X-ray diagnosis and treatment of indigent resident cases.

Washington's good-will delegation will return today (Sunday) at 4:15 p. m. from its cross-country trip to San Francisco's Golden Gate International Exposition aboard the "Commissioners' Special."

One hundred and sixty delegates, headed by Commissioner David McCoach, jr., and Thomas P. Morgan, jr., attended District Day at the fair on July 12, after a nine-day trip from Washington. En route the delegation was met by several score mayors and treated to breakfasts, luncheons and dinners.

While in Hollywood, the visitors were entertained at a luncheon by Louis B. Mayer and taken on a tour of the M-G-M studios. Thanks to Police Chief Brown, the visitors were met at every stopover by a corps of motorcycle escorts.

Recklessness Is Blamed for 49 Plane Fatalities

Reckless disregard of commonsense rules was the chief cause of 49 fatal aerial accidents included in Air Safety Board reports during June, the Civil Aeronautics Board announced yesterday. For the fifteenth consecutive month domestic airlines operated without a fatality to passengers or crew, according to the report.

Two deaths occurred when pilots flew their planes into hillsides while hunting coyotes from the air. Reckless stunting, largely by inexperienced pilots at altitudes below the 1,500-foot minimum set in the regulations, killed 14 others.

One pilot with little training was killed while testing his home-made plane. Three flights ended in death when pilots insisted on trying to push through adverse weather conditions.

Another Kind of SEEING EYE

When you are in the dark about which way to turn . . . a house to sell, rooms to be rented quickly, apartment vacancies cutting into profits . . . the seeing eyes of a Post want ad will lead you directly to the desired results.

First, because Post want ads go where you can't possibly go . . . into the family reading circle of thousands of Washington homes.

Second, because Post want ads are read by your most responsive, able-to-buy prospects.

Stop groping for prospects—depend on the Seeing Eye, a Post want ad.

RENTED ROOM IN TWO DAYS

Mrs. Fred Edward, 1845 Irving St. N.W., advertised a large, cool, nicely furnished room. Two days insertion in The Post want-ad section was all that was necessary to secure a tenant. She says she will use only The Post hereafter.

SOLD $150 BOAT IN ONE DAY

E. A. Fowler, 209 Washington Ave., Riverdale, Md., was kept busy answering the phone when he advertised a cabin cruiser for $150. He sold the boat with no difficulty the first day the ad appeared in The Post classified section.

EMPLOYED PART-TIME MAID

Mrs. F. H. Lanahan, 2436 39th Place N.W., was particularly pleased with the results of her help-wanted ad in The Post. She was able to secure a very capable and reliable girl through a two-line Post want ad.

RENTED HOUSE IN ONE DAY

Several people, among them a Congressman, answered Mrs. Clarence Cottam's house-for-rent ad in The Post. It was easy to find a satisfactory tenant willing to pay $60 a month from one day's Post advertising.

SUCCESS THROUGH POST AD

M. L. Walton, 806 Noyes Drive, Silver Spring, tried to sell a house from advertising in other papers. No results. A Post want ad brought three prospects and sold the house. Total cost of Post advertising: $7.20.

SOLD GREAT DANE FOR $15

P. Mason Horan, 1116 First St. S.E., advertised 8-week-old Great Dane puppies, and sold a dog the first day. He was especially pleased because the dog did not have any papers showing his pedigree.

Parkers' Nemesis Has New 'Big Stick'

Motorcycle Policeman Richard O. Bankert, nemesis of overtime parkers, returned from his vacation on the West Coast yesterday armed with new weapons—a longer stick and a bigger piece of chalk.

He acquired the new equipment from the Sacramento, Calif., police. There is only slight difference between Bankert's old marking stick and the new, but it completely revolutionizes the technique of chalking cars "on the fly." Previously Bankert chalked the front tires. Now he will mark the rear ones.

His stick is slightly curved and longer, giving him greater reaching power. The chalk, he said, has greater "staying" powers.

At right—Sue Garman holds the cup won by Truffles, an alley cat, judged the best short-haired animal

By Scott Hart
Post Staff Writer

It's happened ever so often in the movies—this thing of a girl from the slums wowing them—but seldom does the alley cat carry off the silver bonbon dish in the cat shows.

It happened here yesterday when the Columbian Cat Fanciers brought out their finest cats for exhibition—languishing, blooded cats of many syllabled names—and watched Miss Susie Musselwhite, 422 Twenty-second street northwest, take the silver bonbon dish with a black alley cat named by spectators, "Truffles."

"Truffles" had the big, luminous button eyes of her kind, the species whose auditions are of the back fence variety. She had a sleek black coat, which might be nature's camouflage against thrown missiles. She had a retreating look, and a self-consciousness among the finer cats.

The judge didn't know who "Truffles" was when she declared her the finest short-haired cat in the show. Some of the Fanciers went about muttering that it was all mighty true to life, and there was some talk about democracy.

The show started at 9 a. m. with 101 entries, but a black cat got too hot in the cage, ran amok, and was taken out. Statistics thereafter were hard to keep, because 15 cats were given away. One little girl asked for "a black and white boy kitten," and was given it. Then more were given away.

There were still plenty of cats. One, "Queene Anne," owned by Mrs. Thomas F. Gahan, of 45 Owens avenue, Hyattsville, was said to have the extraordinary facility of having kittens in relays—that is, a kitten today, then a kitten tomorrow and possibly two or three the next day.

Mrs. Gahan brought in a red tabby named "Lucky," that was born two weeks prematurely and had to be fed with a medicine dropper at the show. Everywhere there were defensive words for the alley cat. The arguments were that nobody knows what magnificent if crossed-up breeds are in the soprano and limb of the fence cat. And, this aside, they catch a lot of rats.

Then the judge, Mrs. Anne Stephenson, of Arlington, said that a red tabby male kitten owned by Mrs. Helen Leitner, of Hamilton, Md., was all-'round finest; that the black Persian kitten owned by Miss Mary Fogarty, of St. Ann's Rectory, was second best, and a female neuter named "Chuckles," owned by the Rosedear Cattery, of Falls Church, was next.

The show was held in the auditorium of the Lewis Hotel Training School, Twenty-third street and Washington Circle northwest.

New Strike May Hamper Defense Work

Jurisdictional Row Threatens in Plane Plant on Long Island

With carpenters scheduled to end their strike tomorrow on the new Social Security-Railroad Retirement buildings here, pending arbitration of their dispute with plasterers' helpers, a new walkout threatens to obstruct the national defense program.

The Post learned that a strike which was to have been called tomorrow at the Ranger Aircraft Co. on Long Island, N. Y., the result of a dispute between sheet metal and iron workers, was postponed yesterday after conferences arranged by the United States Conciliation Service.

The aircraft plant, reported to have large Federal orders for training planes, is engaged in a program of factory expansion. It was in this connection that the jurisdictional dispute arose, both sheet metal and iron workers claiming the installation of a corrugated iron roof on one of the new buildings.

Sheehan Wins Delay

For the last three days, it was learned, Conciliation Commissioner Frank Sheehan has been attempting to prevent the threatened strike. Labor Department sources indicated yesterday his efforts had been successful, at least temporarily.

John P. Coyne, president of the A. F. of L. building and construction trades department, was in New York yesterday, presumably to try to mediate the family quarrel.

Coyne is scheduled to be back in Washington tomorrow to visit the twin Social Security and Railroad Retirement buildings, which are being rushed to completion for emergency occupancy by the War Department and National Defense Advisory Commission, and inspect work in dispute between the carpenters and plasterers' helpers.

Wooden Horse Dispute

According to an agreement reached Friday, his decision will be accepted by both sides as to which trade shall get the job of building wooden horses and trestles needed by plasterers in their work. The 250 carpenters on the $14,000,000 project walked out last Wednesday because the work was being done by the plasterers' helpers.

Two other jurisdictional disputes are smoldering on the same project and officials fear either or both may wind up in a strike. One involves a claim by plasterers that they should have a greater share of the installation of acoustical tile, a job now divided among carpenters, bricklayers and plasterers. The other is a quarrel between glaziers and bricklayers over installation of structural glass in lavatories.

Report Shows 'Blood Bank' Is Invaluable

Children's Hospital Superintendent Says It Shortens Treatment

The blood and serum "bank" at Children's Hospital was credited yesterday by Superintendent Mattie Gibson with reducing the length of stay of many patients who are admitted in serious condition.

Funds raised by Washingtonians in 1939 and 1940 through voluntary card parties and dances under auspices of The Post and the American Contract Bridge League are maintaining the blood bank.

Miss Gibson, presenting her report for the first half of 1940, submitted figures showing that while more patients were treated than during the same period last year, there were fewer dispensary visits, child welfare visits, home visits and hospital days.

"The more scientific checks and early diagnosis of disease, and treatment with serums and blood transfusions made more easily and quickly available through our blood and serum bank help to account for the cutting down of the length of stay," Miss Gibson said.

"During the past six months 1,159 transfusions were given."

The institution, she said, now has 24 postgraduate students and 45 student nurses affiliated with 10 nursing schools in Washington and other cities.

Nazis Trying To Destroy Czechs, Speaker Charges

Bohemia and Moravia "are now one huge prison camp," Edward Wolesensky, president of the Czech-American Alliance, told the organization last night at May's Restaurant, 2317 Calvert street northwest. Nevertheless, he said, "the Czech spirit of resistance has not been lost."

"Those on the outside," he declared, "may not enter . . . and those within may not leave. The Germans are systematically carrying out a 12-point program by which they hope to exterminate the Czechs. Knowing the history of the Czechs, the oppressors have determined to do a thorough job of destroying this nation which has withstood hundreds of years of persecution."

Wolesensky said political and intellectual leaders are being rounded up and new leadership is being prevented by denying higher education to the Czechs. The national culture and art, he said, are being destroyed and scientific laboratories "looted."

Symphony Director 'Exposes' Einstein as 'Jam Music' Fan

Frank Black, Here To Conduct Concerts, Bears Savant's 'Secret'

By Gerald G. Gross

Take it from one who knows, the sight of the year is Dr. Albert Einstein fiddling away in a "chamber music jam session," with Heifetz and Elman in the first violin chairs, and a dozen or more other famous musicians rounding out the ensemble.

The "one who knows" is Frank Black, music director of the National Broadcasting Co. He exposed the great physicist's propensities for "jam" yesterday in an interview preceding his first rehearsal for tonight's Watergate symphony concert. Black will be guest conductor.

"It gives him the greatest kick," the director said, referring to Einstein. "His playing? Well, it isn't the best, but I think he enjoys it all the more by not taking it too seriously."

Black said it reminds him of the time, back in the late twenties, when he was music director for a large phonograph company, and Leopold Godowski, now deceased, came to the studios frequently to make recordings. The famous artist would spend an hour at a time listening to a jazz band make records, Black said.

"Godowski loved all music, so long as it was good and well played," he explained.

It's the same with the N. B. C. music director, who will lead the National Symphony Orchestra on Wednesday evening, as well as at the Watergate tonight. In fact, he admitted, he has to be that way as long as the radio continues to be an outlet for swing and classics alike.

This is Black's first professional appearance in the Capital. He seldom conducts outside the studio, wishes he could do so oftener.

Philadelphia-born, he studied piano and might have been a concert artist today if he had not met Victor Herbert. The composer encouraged him to be a conductor, got him his first job in that capacity with the "Miss 1914" Company, a musical which was being readied for opening at the old Century Theater in New York.

DR. FRANK BLACK
is hot under the collar

"What a show that was!" the scholarly looking Black recalled. "Marion Davies and Lilyan Tashman in the chorus . . . Ziegfeld and Dillingham, the producers . . . music by Victor Herbert and Jerome Kern . . . Van and Schenck and Lew Fields among the principals.

"And—get this—the rehearsal pianist was George Gershwin."

Black broke into radio in 1923 as a piano player on Station WOO, in his home town of Philadelphia. He has been N. B. C.'s music director the last six years. The most eventful assignment he ever had was commuting by airplane between New York and Chicago for 55 consecutive weeks to direct a program in the latter city.

Bethesda Boy Wins Scholarship To The Citadel

John L. Shumate, 18, of Bethesda, who was awarded the D. A. R. medal for citizenship for 1940, has been awarded a four-year scholarship to The Citadel, military college at Charleston, S C., it was learned yesterday.

Shumate, who lives with his parents at 7200 Overhill road, was graduated from the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School in June.

While there he was a member of the student council, a member of a national honor society, and was selected as the 1940 captain of the all-District basketball team. He will enroll at The Citadel September 2.

The scholarship was founded in 1936 in memory of the late Col. Redmond C. Stewart, Baltimore lawyer. Prize in a competition open to all Maryland boys who finished school in June, it covers all necessary expenses for the four-year course.

10 Arrested After Religious Riot Face Trial Tomorrow

Trial of ten residents of Rockville, Md., on charges of unlawful assembly and disorderly conduct as the result of the invasion of a meeting of the Jehovah's Witnesses June 19 in Rockville, is scheduled to begin tomorrow in Circuit Court at Rockville.

State's Attorney Ben G. Wilkinson had summoned 15 witnesses for the State and yesterday, just before the clerk of the court's office closed, he issued summonses for five more witnesses. It was believed the move indicated new evidence uncovered by the State.

The defendants, through their attorneys, former State's Attorney James H. Pugh, State Senator Robert Peter and Kenneth Lyddane, have summoned approximately 80 witnesses. The trial will be before a jury.

Mass to Follow Rites Tomorrow For A. C. Hulligan

Funeral services for Allen C. Hulligan, 64, of 1725 Newton street northwest, who died Thursday at Hagerstown, Md., will be held tomorrow at 8:30 a. m. at the S. H. Hines funeral home, 2801 Fourteenth street northwest, followed by a mass at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart. Burial will be in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Plans for the funeral were delayed by difficulty in locating Mrs. Hulligan, who was on a motor trip and flew back to Washington after being reached by police radio in Ohio.

Mr. Hulligan was born at Cleveland, and came to Washington 37 years ago as a representative of Armour & Co., soon after his marriage to Agnes Cleland, of Cleveland. He was a member of the Manor Club and the Holy Name Society, and was senior counsellor of the United Commercial Travelers of America. Besides his wife, he leaves a sister, Mrs. Frank Kelby, of Cleveland, and a niece, Mrs. Walter Riffle, of Pittsburgh.

Pallbearers will be Jacob Pyrah, Gus Freeburg, Russell Pole, Schuyler Sheppard, Harvey Anderson and Henry Schaffert.

Picnicker Hurt in Fall as G.P.O. Group Frolics at Fort Hunt

One picnicker's 15-foot fall from a gun embrasure at Fort Hunt, Va., yesterday marred a program of fun enjoyed by 1,000 Government Printing Office employes.

The accident victim was Edward P. Roberts, 38, of 5523 Kansas avenue northwest, a linotype operator in the G. P. O. Roberts was in Alexandria Hospital with severe head injuries last night. Hospital attaches did not believe his condition critical.

The picnic was the first outing staged by the G. P. O.'s Recreation and Welfare Association. Events included a fried chicken dinner prepared at the Printing Office cafeteria and a program of contests and games.

Miss Opal Davis, an employe in the cafeteria, won the title "Miss G. P. O." in a bathing beauty contest. The title was conferred on her by Russell H. Herrell, administrative assistant to the public printer.

Philip Geraci was awarded a cup for first place in the rifle-shooting contest, and H. K. Stephens captured a first-place cup in the pistol-shooting event.

There was also a softball game, horseshoe pitching, and, in the evening, dancing.

Alfred E. Cohen was chairman of the affair.

Awards Made As Gen. Parsons Reviews ROTC

University Heads See Ceremonies At Fort Meade, Md.

By the Associated Press

Fort George G. Meade, Md., July 20.—Maj. Gen. James K. Parsons, commanding officer of the Third Corps Area, today reviewed a parade of 500 members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

Approximately 2,000 persons, including presidents of colleges and universities of Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia and the District of Columbia, witnessed the parade, a presentation of awards and saw one of the Nation's newest light tanks.

The tank, delivered this week, has armor thick enough to resist machine gun and artillery fire.

Those who participated in the parade, juniors in colleges and universities, are taking a six-week training course to qualify next year for commissions as second lieutenants in the Reserve Corps.

Military medals were awarded the following:

Rifle marskmanship—First, V. W. B. Wales, jr., Georgetown University; second, J. W. R. Watson, jr., Drexel Institute of Technology; third, E. G. X. Kurdziel, Georgetown University; fourth, G. R. Leins, Pennsylvania Military College; fifth, R. G. Hawkins, Western Maryland College; sixth, L. C. Smith, Drexel Institute of Technology.

Pistol marksmanship—First, R. S. Buck, Drexel Institute of Technology; second, H. W. Erhardt, Lafayette College; third, P. J. Schenk, Lafayette College; fourth, R. R. Westfall, University of Maryland; fifth, J. C. Williams, Pennsylvania Military College; sixth, B. W. Walker, Virginia Military Institute.

Taxis, Buses Draw Criticism Of Motorists

Keystone Automobile Club members, asked recently for opinions on Washington traffic conditions, complained variously of glaring headlights, taxicabs, buses and bicycles, the club reported yesterday.

Among the referendum replies was a complaint about buses "hogging" the pavements in alleged efforts to maintain schedules. It was charged that too much parking space is allotted to them, also.

Bicyclists, it was said, should be compelled to obey traffic lights and signs and taxicabs should be forced to stop only at curbs. Stricter regulation for issuance of driver permits was advocated.

Some wanted a regulation compelling uniform height of car bumpers, some suggested a campaign against glaring headlights and horn blowing.

One of the most general demands, it was said, is for publicly owned parking facilities, especially in the downtown area.

The referendum resulted in almost unanimous membership approval of the platform formulated by Keystone's advisory board. Planks voted on included opposition to diversion of District motor vehicle tax revenue to other than highway purposes; approval of underpasses at Scott and Dupont circles; year-round availability of playgrounds to promote child safety and steps for elimination of unfit drivers.

Civil War Veteran, 94, Finally Joins G. A. R.

Philadelphia, July 20 (AP).—William Ritter, 94, who declined to join the Grand Army of the Republic because he was "fed up with everything military" at the conclusion of the Civil War in 1865, joined the dwindling ranks of the "boys in blue" here today.

The oath was administered by Moses I. French, 98, last surviving member of Ellis Post No. 6, Ritter, a veteran of the 198th Pennsylvania Regiment, changed his mind about joining the G. A. R. after witnessing a Memorial Day parade.

Nazi Party Can't Afford To Halt War, Writer Says

Must Remain Dynamic or Face Break-up From Within, Herbert Wolfe Believes; Expects Stalin to Be Final Victor

Henry C. Wolfe, of Coshocton, Ohio, is a writer and lecturer on international affairs who in the past few years has gained no little reputation as a prophet. Here are some opinions he expressed during a visit to Washington yesterday:

H. C. WOLFE

The war is far from being over and Hitler still far from having won it.

Hitler's offer of peace may be quite sincere, but, like all his previous peace offers, it is meaningless. Even if Hitler wants to stop, he cannot stop.

The chances are still very good that the ultimate winner will be neither Hitler nor Britain, but Josef Stalin.

It was Wolfe who in a book, "The German Octopus," published nearly five months before the peace of Munich, accurately envisaged the Nazi-Soviet Alliance, the announcement of which, a year later, was to throw the chanceries of Europe into confusion. In his latest book, "Imperial Soviets," writing before the event, he forecast the Russian advance into Bessarabia.

Now he believes that a Nazi attack on the British Isles will be a signal for a Russian push toward the Dardanelles. If the Turks resist, as seems probable, the Bulgarians may join the Russians in the hope of regaining Adrianople. Nothing, says Wolfe, would gratify the British more than to have Russia throw her weight around the Balkans at this particular time. Similarly, nothing is more likely to disconcert the Germans than to have the Russians making themselves at home in the Nazi's private liebensraum. Hitler, however, may count upon being able, after he has whipped the British, to make Stalin move out, Wolfe believes.

Wolfe thinks that the destiny of Europe may not be decided by any battle but by factors that are now imponderable. One of these is the famine whose shadow already hangs over the continent. Another is the enormous police problem confronting Hitler through his subjugation of so many millions of Czechs, Poles, Danes, Norwegians, Dutch, Belgians and French.

Wolfe is one of those who believe in the ultimate fusion of the German and Russian revolutions. But this, he thinks, cannot happen until either Hitler or Stalin is in a position to dominate the other. This will determine whether the ultimate complexion of Bolshevism is to be Red or Brown.

(Wolfe served with the French and Italian armies in the World War, and afterward on Red Cross and American relief missions to Russia and the Balkans.

Donny Colachicco Selected 'Miss Commerce' in Contest

DONNY COLACHICCO

Census Bureau Girl Adjudged Most Popular By Legion Post No. 45

Miss Donny Colachicco, of the Census Bureau, was named "Miss Commerce" last night in a contest to select the most popular woman employe of the Department of Commerce.

The contest featured a moonlight cruise sponsored by Department of Commerce Post, No. 45, American Legion. She was presented with a loving cup offered by the post.

Second place went to Miss Jean Houston, also of the Census Bureau. She was awarded a floral bouquet.

Judges, who announced their verdict from a vantage point of safety, were Edward W. Libbey, chief clerk of the Commerce Department; James A. Brearley, chief clerk of the Patent Office; Gerald Ryan, assistant to the census director, and Zack Evans, of the Personnel Division.

Appeal Made Against D. C. Income Tax

Former Bulkley Aide Bases Court Fight On 'Domicile Clause'

Jo V. Morgan yesterday was asked to decide whether the Supreme Court's ruling in the Sweeney income tax case applies to persons employed in private industry.

Herbert G. Pillen, an associate of former Senator Bulkley (Democrat), of Ohio, in the latter's Washington office yesterday asked the District Board of Tax Appeals, of which Morgan is the sole member, to grant a refund of $52.43 in income taxes on the ground he is not "domiciled" in the District. He lives, with Mrs. Pillen, who also requested a refund, at 4901 New Hampshire avenue northwest. She is employed by the Federal Government.

In the Sweeney case, James Sweeney, an attorney for the Department of Justice, was granted a refund on his income taxes, on the ground that he was domiciled in Boston, although he had lived here for more than 20 years. Sweeney claimed legal and voting residence in Massachusetts.

In the Sweeney case, however, the question of a person's domicile was tied up with a worker in the Federal service, who, it so happens, is at work in Washington. The new case before the board, deals with one working in private industry.

Pillen stated his firm has an office in Cleveland, Ohio, where he maintains his legal residence.

The District's income tax is applied to persons "domiciled" in the District. An attempt is now being made by the District to take an income tax, such as the Pillen case, to the higher courts in hopes of establishing once and for all a clean-cut decision on the question of "domicile."

'Bit Lonesome For Capital,' Mann Writes

Zoological Park Head Due Home in August With Animal Cargo

Dr. William M. Mann, director of National Zoological Park, who left Washington last February to collect specimens in Liberia, is becoming "a bit lonesome for Washington." That is what he says in a letter received yesterday by Webster P. True, chief of the Smithsonian Institution's editorial division. It was mailed June 12.

Dr. Mann wrote that the pygmy hippotamus captured by the expedition was doing nicely, as were 15 crates of birds and a number of other specimens. For the most part, however, he had little to say about what had been bagged, realizing that anything can happen before the animals are safely unloaded at the Zoo.

Latest information is that the cargo vessel West Irmo, bearing Dr. and Mrs. Mann and their specimens, sailed from Monrovia, Liberia, July 13. This could not be confirmed yesterday, however. The vessel is expected to dock in Norfolk between August 8 and 15.

We wonder if Del Baker was listening in when Buck Newsom, in a broadcast at St. Louis, declared that "Gabby Street is the greatest manager I ever played for." . . . Newsom's broken thumb is no novelty . . . he broke the same thumb three years ago and returned to the pitching mound a week later . . . at a St. Louis bar one night, Newsom boasted that Al Simmons never made a home run against him . . . the next day, Simmons banged him for a home run with the bases full in the first inning, and made another homer in his next time at bat . . . the lean gate of the Armstrong-Jenkins bout exasperated Mike Jacobs to the extent that he fired two publicity men and two other office employes . . . the Brooklyn Dodgers played exhibition games during the three-day cessation of league hostilities for the All-Star game, but they didn't beef . . . because General Manager Larry MacPhail permitted them to split the exhibition game receipts.

The angles of the recent Joey Archibald-Harry Jeffra fight at Baltimore are beginning to make themselves clear . . . Jeffra, the winner, is now matched to fight Spider Armstrong who, like Archibald, is managed by Al Weil . . . Manager Joe McCarthy was ready to bench First Baseman Babe Dahlgren and let Outfielder Tommy Henrich play the position until Dahlgren clouted two homers against the Indians the other day to save his job . . . the Yankees will lead the fight for the repeal of the no-trade rule for champions in the American League when the club owners meet in December . . . In a desperate attempt to get some hits, Zeke Bonura and Jimmy Bloodworth are swinging lighter bats . . . Manager Oscar Vitt told New York baseball writers that the Griffith Stadium diamond is the worst in the league and that it's sinful to expect infielders to play errorless ball there . . . Thornton Lee, of the White Sox, broke in with the Tampa, Fla., club in the same year that Gabe Menendez, Washington fight promoter, was the club's trainer.

The hexing business has fallen on such evil times that Evil-Eye Finkel has been driven to the plebian trade of managing fighters . . . he now has two in his stable, Tiger Jackie Flowers, and Irish Johnny Dean . . . the District Boxing Commission's relief fund for needy fighters isn't functioning, according to Finkel . . . who points out that Flowers suffered broken ribs in a bout here three weeks ago and has received no aid from the fund despite frequent appeals . . . and despite the fact Flowers contributed 1 per cent of his share of the purse to the fund . . . somebody is screwy when he says that the N. B. A. lightweight champion, Sammy Angott, has lost only one fight . . . that to Davey Day . . . Angott fought on the preliminary card at Griffith Stadium when Petey Sarron took Freddie Miller's featherweight title, and was licked by Bobby Dean . . . a nonentity named Billy Marquard also holds two decisions over Angott.

Golfer Henry Picard probably can handle his fists better than any pro golfer in the land . . . In exchange for a series of golf lessons from Picard, Steve Gabriel, Charleston, S. C., trainer, taught Picard how to box . . . Max Carey is now managing the Miami club of the Florida East Coast League . . . Matchmaker Gabe Menendez has tried unsuccessfully to bring back to Washington Georgie Abrams, who has been unbeaten for a year and a half in New York rings . . . Menendez visualizes an Abrams-Kid Cocoa bout, but Abrams insists on coming out at 160 pounds, 12 more than Cocoa's weight . . . the reason Clark Griffith was not interested in signing Bill Nicholson or Mike Dejan, the outfielders Chattanooga sold to National League clubs, was because Joe Engel could get such fancy prices for 'em . . . and thus will be better able to pay off the mortgage on the club which the Washington team holds.

Longshot Humbles Derby Winner and Bradley Hope in Classic

Sirocco, a 13-to-1 shot in the betting, is shown winning the $50,000 Arlington Classic by seven lengths yesterday. Gallahadion, Kentucky Derby winner, and the favored Bimelech finished second and third, respectively. The two are partly obscured by the finish pole. Up the track the remainder of the field, Dit, Alhalon and Andy K., can be seen lumbering along. Sirocco ran the mile and a quarter in 2:03 under the able guidance of Jockey Georgie Woolf

Sirocco Scores Over Bimelech in Classic

Outsider, 13-to-1 Shot, Wins by 7 Lengths In $50,000 Arlington Park Race; 35,000 Fans Witness Startling Upset

By the United Press

Chicago, July 20.—Dixiana Farm's Sirocco, romping down the stretch with all the speed of the desert wind after which he was named, threw the 3-year-old division into complete confusion today when he ran away from Gallahadion and Bimelech for a seven-length triumph in the twelfth renewal of the Arlington classic.

Winner of only five races in 17 starts and given no consideration whatsoever in advance ratings, the long-shot son of Sweep All slipped into the lead as the field swung into the straightaway, then just picked up his heels for the easiest triumph scored in any major stake of the 1940 season.

Far back, with the dust of the powdery track stinging their eyes, came Gallahadion and Bimelech for second and third. There was little honor in this, however, for the two were beaten and disgraced in a way that none of the 35,000 spectators had believed possible.

Sirocco struck with startling suddenness. Running fourth after more than six furlongs of the mile-and-a-quarter route had been covered, he moved up behind Gallahadion as the latter went after Bimelech. Within 200 yards he had breezed past both and from there it was no contest. It was seven lengths at the wire with Bimelech another three behind and Dit, Alhalon and Andy K straggling feebly in the order named.

Clocked in 2:03

Sirocco was clocked in 2:03 flat on a fast track. He carried 121 pounds, 5 less than top weight, under the cool hand of Georgie Woolf to earn a net purse of $37,935, almost twice his combined winnings for the last two years—and pay $28.20, $8.20 and $2.80 in the mutuels. Gallahadion paid $4.40 and $2.60 and Bimelech, favored at 3-5, returned a skimpy $3.20 for show.

At the start it was all Bimelech and Andy K. The two of them broke from their stalls with the zip of sprinters and easily pulled away by a length as they flashed past the grandstand with Sirocco, Alahalon, Dit and Gallahadion following. Andy K. went only a few more yards, however, when he refused to take the first turn. Jockey J. Richard was forced to pull him up and practically start all over again.

Eye-to-Eye Battle

Bimelech took sole charge of the lead going into the backstretch, but several seconds later Dit came at him. For half the straightaway the two of them fought eye-to-eye before the latter came up. Gallahadion, in third place now and plodding steadily along, made his bid at this point—and then came the shock. Gallahadion's backers began shouting as the Milky Way Farm colt pulled vigorously to the front and began swinging the turn. Once the field straightened away for the last run to the wire the silks which led the parade were not those of Gallahadion, but the quaint solferino, buff and scarlet ruffles sported by Sirocco.

When Sirocco stuck his homely head in front the race was over. Gallahadion tried hard to catch him but couldn't. Bimelech was already beaten and the crowd which filled Arlington Park for the two Middle West's biggest horse races saw Sirocco romp out by two, by four, by six and finally by seven lengths.

It might as well have been 50.

Revolta Bags A 69 to Lead Chicago Open

Hits Half-Way Mark With a 136 Total; Guldahl, With 137, Holds Second Place

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 20.—Curly haired Johnny Revolta, long one of the finest short-iron artists in the game, demonstrated his wizardry around the greens at the Tam O' Shanter today with a three-under-par 69 performance which gave him a 36-hole total of 136 strokes—and the leadership of the $5,000 Chicago open golf championship at the half-way point.

The 30-year-old professional from Evanston, Ill., who had a fine five under par 67 yesterday, gave a brilliant exhibition of chip and explosion shots in four of his five birdies as he went out in 36, even par, and came home in 33, three under regulation figures. His ability around the greens made him a consistent money winner for years and his forte stood him in good stead today.

In second place as the tourney headed for tomorrow's 36-hole final was Ralph Guldahl, two time winner of the national open title. Putting on one of the finishes for which he is famous, he came in with a blazing 34-34—68, four under par, for a 36-hole total of 137. He made up for wildness off the tee with some fine approaches and brilliant work on the greens.

The amateur contingent, which gave the professional brigade a rousing battle in the opening round, were still in there "pitching." Jim Ferrier, open and amateur champion of Australia who led the field yesterday with a 66, came in today with a 73 for a 139 total which led the Simon-pure entries.

Also in the 139 bracket was Dick Metz, Chicago professional who had a 71 today. In the 141 division were two amateurs, Wilford Wehrle of the home club, and Willie Turnesa, former national amateur titleholder. Wehrle had a second round 69 while Turnesa took a 73.

Jim Foulis, Chicago, and Al Huske, De Kalb, Ill., were in the 142 bracket, with a Chicago professional, Bob McDonald, and Ben Hogan of New York, at 143. Among the equalers of par of 144 for the two rounds were Ed Oliver, Harry Cooper and Gene Sarazen.

Lawson Little, the national open champion who had a 73 yesterday, equaled par today for a 145 total. Sam Snead, a pretourney favorite with Guldahl, could do no better than a 75 today for a 36 hole total of 148. This put him well within the group of some 75 players who qualified for the finals but far away from a reasonable chance of copping the first prize money of $1,500.

Rookie Victim Of Misplays, Loses, 4 to 1

Mates Give Shabby Support; Only One Run Is Earned Off Youngster's Delivery

By Shirley Povich.
Post Staff Writer

Sidney Hudson's six-game winning streak is no more. The end came yesterday. The Nats played a leading role in the obsequies, which took the form of a 4-1 triumph of the Browns. Young Hudson's string of successes expired from the combined forces of sabotage, nonsupport and an overdose of John Niggeling's knuckle-ball pitching for the St. Louis club.

The Browns, in avenging a one-hit shutout suffered at Hudson's hands on his last appearance against the club, had the cooperation of Hudson's Washington pals. Only one of the four runs the Nats' rookie permitted was free from the taint of a misplay in the field.

But deserving of victory was Niggeling, a swarthy, dour-faced veteran who was cut loose by the Cincinnati Reds last year after a ten-year career in the minors. Niggeling, a side-arm knuckle-baller, held Washington to seven hits, and in the last five innings he was invincible.

Nats' Hits Come Early

The Nats packed all of their seven hits into the first four innings. Thereafter, they were helpless against Niggeling. During the next four innings, they couldn't get to first base. Niggeling retired 12 men in order and then held the Nats hitless in the ninth.

Niggeling's start was not impressive. He gave up a run to the Nats in the first inning when George Case beat out a bunt, stole second, and scored with the help of two long flies delivered by Buddy Lewis and Gee Walker. In the third the Nats filled the bases on an error and two hits, but Buddy Myer poped out. In the fourth they collected two more hits, to no avail. Then, all of a sudden, Niggeling reformed and yielded no more hits.

Hudson was itching two-hit ball until the fifth inning when the Browns came up with the tying run after Clift singled to left with one out. Heffner delivered a long single to left and Clift, not content with reaching third, dashed for the plate. He scored when Pofahl made a miserable throw on the relay from the outfield.

The seventh inning, in which the Browns came up with two runs to break the 1-1 tie, was a brutal session for Hudson. Buddy Myer inspired the Browns' uprising by making a wild throw to first on Radcliff's grounder. Hudson struck out Berardino, but Clift singled to center, moving Radcliff to second. With the aid of Rick Ferrell's high throw to third, Radcliff and Clift pulled a double steal, and in this emergency, Heffner was ordered purposely passed.

Pofahl's Throw Is Late

Susce grounded to Pofahl and all runners were safe with a run crossing the plate when Pofahl's throw to second for a force play was tardy. It was scored as a hit for Susce. Hudson struck out Niggeling, but Grace beat out a grounder that Myer fumbled, and the second run of the inning scored.

Hudson brought matters to a halt at that point by striking out McQuinn—his third strikeout vicim in the inning in which he was licked.

There was nothing tainted about the Browns' fourth run. It was a well-spanked homer by Walter Jud-

Two Win Hagerstown Double Worth $3,066

Price Is Second Largest in Maryland Race History; Washington Man Collects; Sheriff Bemoans Luck in Changing Tickets

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

Hagerstown, Md., July 20.—The second largest daily double in the history of this State—$3,066.30—was paid to two men here this afternoon.

William M. Martin, of Brownsville, Md., and Charles West, 1300 block of Nineteenth street northwest, Washington, D. C., waited more than two hours before appearing at the cashier's window for the small fortune on their $2 investments.

They held the only precious "7 and 8" tickets sold in the daily double pool and narrowly missed having to share the pay-off four ways. Sheriff Joe Baker, of this county, sent a boy to the window to purchase two tickets on another combination and the lad returned with two "7 and 8" pasteboards. The unlucky sheriff exchanged the tickets just before betting on the double was closed.

Both winners were involved in photo finishes and in the case of Beacon Queen, victor in the second race, she had to survive a claim of foul before the triumph was made official. Beacon Queen paid an individual mutuel of $48.30 while Puddles, winner of the opening event, brought her backers $88.40 in the straight pool.

Root Lodges Foul Claim

Jockey Buddy Root, who rode Quick Vine, the favorite in the second race, lodged an objection against Jockey W. Kelley, who drove Beacon Queen. Root claimed the 6-year-old mare came over on him while the two horses were battling for the lead. The officials weighed his claim while holders of "doubles" ending with Quick Vine dreamed of cashing $613. However, the red official light went on and the monster pay-off for Messrs. Mortin and West was sealed.

When they finally appeared at the cashier's window Mortin and West were asked if they wanted checks or cash. "Let me feel it," smiled West. Mortin, however, accepted a check from the Hagerstown Fair, Inc.

Puddles, racing in the colors of J. Maddock, had shown nothing in two starts at Charles Town this year and came from behind under Jockey C. Walters' handling to beat Polly Fair on the wire. It was the mare's first victory sinc e Cumberland's 1939 meeting. Beacon Queen had fair from this year and won a race at Charles Town on May 24. The amount of the pay-off was topped in Maryland only by the $6,754.50 paid by the combination of James Boy and Charles F at Bowie on November 16, 1938. It is the tenth largest pay-off since the daily double was

Don McNeill Tops Kramer For Net Title

Top-Seeded Player Wins at Baltimore; Marble and Arnold Score in Doubles

By Jack Munhall
A Staff Correspondent

Baltimore Country Club, July 20. Jack, the Giant Killer of the Maryland State and Middle Atlantic section lawn tennis championships crashed to earth here today.

Outslugged and outsmarted at every turn of a great match, Jack Kramer, the unranked 18-year-old from Belvedere Gardens, Calif., lost the singles finals to top-seeded Don McNeill of Oklahoma City, 9—7, 6—3, 6—2, before 2,500 fans who crammed the stands and forgot a 100-degree heat to witness the best-played event of the tournament.

Earlier the newly-formed combination of Queen Alice Marble of Beverly Hills, and her Los Angeles protege, Mary Arnold, had won the woman's doubles finals with a fairly easy 7—5, 6—4 victory over the top-seeded foreign team of Mary Hardwick and Valerie Scott. After overcoming a 3—0 deficit in the first set Misses Marble and Arnold never again were behind. Miss Marble and Sarah Palfrey Fabyan were 1939 Wimbledon and American titleholders.

Brilliant Form

Kramer, fourth-ranking junior and seventeenth among the country's men players, was again in the brilliant form that had carried him to upsets of fourth-seeded Gardner Mulloy and second-seeded Welby Van Horn, but yet he wasn't nearly good enough to more than slightly extend McNeill.

The first set was the telling one, a superb exhibition of fast services in which games went to the server until the sixteenth and final when McNeill broke through at love on three errors and a double fault.

Still apparently impervious to the sapping effects of the heat and high humidity, the players continued at a terrific pace in the second set. McNeill took an early advantage.

Eleven World Marks Set at Havre de Grace

Speedboat Drivers Add to New Marks; Locals Entered

By the Associated Press

Havre de Grace, Md., July 20.—Young Tommy Chatfield, who raced motorcycles in Europe before he snagged a berth on the United States Olympic bobsled team, put on the big show today as the Havre de Grace Yacht Club ended its eleventh annual regatta with 11 new world records in the bag.

Chatfield, husky New York City driver, who has been racing speedboats exactly a year, accounted for one new record personally and saw one of his two boats, driven by Polly Wright, of Philadelphia, tack up a second.

Without question, Chatfield had the two fastest boats on the Susquehanna today—and he was up against a fast field, out to launch the Eastern regatta season.

Yesterday four new records went up as the racing started. Three more resulted from mile trials early this morning and three more developed from the 5-mile races later—but one of the new marks merely bettered a record established yesterday.

Chatfield's Viper, a 225-cubic inch racer so new that its driver was none too sure of its tricks, clocked 85 miles in mile trials, missing the record by a narrow margin. In winning the Eastern 225 championship for Chatfield, the Viper passed the 60-mile mark, but was far short of the 70-mile-an-hour record speed.

Only one new mark resulted from three solid hours of outboard racing today. That was set by Don Whitfield, of Upper Montclair, N. J.,

Big Flash Wins $25,000 Derby At Hollywood

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, July 20.—Blasting the Western championship dreams of the favored Mioland and Sweepida, Thomas D. Taggart's Big Flash came from nowhere today to capture the third running of the $25,000 added Hollywood Derby at Hollywood Park.

Closing with a burst of power to the amazement of the throng of 30,000, the big chestnut colt from the Indiana Stable bowled over Sweepida in a rush down the stretch, and held off a second challenge from W. B. Simpson's Weigh Anchor to take the winner's purse of $18,750 by a length and a quarter.

Mioland Runs Fourth

Charles S. Howard's Mioland, backed down to even money and bidding for the 3-year-old crown of the West, ran fourth behind the second betting choice of the mile and a quarter race, Harry C. Hill's Sweepida.

Jockey Eugene Rodriguez held the hefty son of Sweep All off the pace, letting Son of War and Sweepida burn up the track. Big Flash, ignored in pre-race forecasts, did not get a call until he began his spectacular charge in the last furlong. It had been his running mate in the betting, John Hay Whitney's Woof Woof, which had been figured to give the favored Mioland and Sweepida a battle.

Ted Dubois Wins Senior Single Sculls

By the Associated Press

Red Bank, N. J., July 20.—A 29-year-old Belgian-born Canadian established a threat to Joe Burk's American sculling supremacy today by winning the senior single sculls event over favored Joe Angyal, Brooklyn fireman, in the sixty-eighth annual regatta of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen.

Theofeld A. (Ted) Dubois, representing the Winnipeg Rowing Club, beat Angyal by a full length in a duel that overshadowed all other performances.

His victory qualified him to meet Burk, the Penn Athletic Club's three-time national champion and diamond sculls winner, in the championship singles and Philadelphia Gold Challenge Cup race tomorrow. A third starter will be Frank Silvio, of the New York A. C., who won the association singles last year.

DuBois, the Canadian national champion, captured today's feature in 7:46.4 under ideal conditions. Angyal who broke Burk's string of 37 consecutive victories last year fought DuBois even for the first mile of the mile and one-quarter mile race, but the powerful Canadian pulled ahead toward the finish.

The only double victory of the day was won by the Undine Barge Club, of Philadelphia, which retained its national title in the senior 145-pound eight-oared shells with coxswain and then annexed a second crown in the senior 145-pound quadruple shells.

Claude Passeau, Gallagher Fined By Ford Frick

By the Associated Press

New York, July 20.—Claude Passeau, Chicago pitcher, was fined $75 and Joe Gallagher, Brooklyn outfielder, $50 by President Ford Frick of the National League today for causing a disturbance in yesterday's Cubs-Dodgers game at Chicago.

PASSEAU

Frick said he fined Passeau for throwing his bat toward the mound after being "dusted off" by Pitcher Hugh Casey and Gallagher for leaving the bench and mixing into something that was none of his business.

Burleigh Grimes Suspended; Has Umpire Trouble

By the Associated Press

Flint, Mich., July 20.—Burleigh Grimes, manager of the Grand Rapids team of the Michigan State Baseball League and formerly manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers, was suspended indefinitely today as the result of an altercation July 7 with Umpire Bob Williams.

GRIMES

Judge W. G. Braham, of Durham, N. C., president of the National Association of Minor Leagues, directed T. J. Halligan, president of the Michigan League, to suspend Grimes pending further action by Braham.

In a letter to Halligan, Braham said Williams informed him Grimes spit into the umpire's face during an argument in a game between the Grand Rapids and Saginaw clubs at Saginaw.

Halligan had fined Grimes $50 and suspended him for five days, following the incident. Grimes rejoined his team early this week.

Browns to Face Monteagudo and Leonard Today

Big Dutch Leonard and little Rene Monteagudo will try to bring the Nats an edge in the three-game series with the Browns when they go to the mound as starting pitchers in a double-header today beginning at 1:30 p. m.

Leonard won his last start to score his tenth victory after encountering three straight defeats, and Monteagudo won promotion to a starting role with clever relief pitching in recent games.

The Browns, who have now won 2 straight after losing 14 in a row, will send Rookie Bob Harris and the under-handed Elden Auker to the mound.

Don McNeill, Clay Court Champ, in Exhibition Here Today

Bitsy Grant Or Gil Hunt To Be Foe

Wightman Cup Star, Mary Hardwicke Also On Afternoon Card At Reservoir Courts

Don McNeill, the Nation's outstanding clay courts tennis player, yesterday agreed to appear here today on an exhibition program at Sixteenth and Kennedy streets northwest, rounding out one of the most impressive arrays of net talent that has been shown in Washington.

McNeill, who defeated National Champion Bobby Riggs for the clay courts championship and who yesterday added the Maryland State and Middle Atlantic crown to his title collection, will play one set with either Gil Hunt, of Washington, or Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, of Atlanta, Ga.

Card Starts at 2:30

The McNeill match will open the program at 2:30. Also scheduled are singles between Hunt and Grant and Margo Lee, of Washington, and Mary Hardwick, the English Wightman Cup star, and mixed doubles between the four of them. Hunt reached the singles semifinals of the tournament at Baltimore this week, while Miss Hardwick gained the singles quarter-finals and the doubles finals.

Prospects of a duel between McNeill and Hunt, who played some of his finest tennis before losing a four-set battle to Welby Van Horn in the Baltimore play Thursday, are one of the reasons a record crowd for a D. C. net exhibition is expected to see today's matches. McNeill, master of every stroke and a superb volleyer, and the equally versatile Hunt can for one set present a game of tennis that would pack 'em in anywhere.

In Semifinals

The performance of youthful Margo Lee against the famed English star also will be viewed with interest by local tennis followers, who predict a fine future for the current City of Washington champion. Miss Lee made a good impression in Baltimore last week, when playing with Emily Lincoln, Boston, for the first time, she reached the doubles semifinals before losing to Misses Hardwick and Valerie Scott.

The meeting of Hunt, ninth ranking player of the country, with the dynamic little Grant, who is ranked fifth, is expected to develop into a grudge match, for Grant is still fuming over the match he lost to Hunt here in a similar exhibition last year.

Admission to the exhibitions will be 40 cents. Stands have been erected so that every one attending may have a seat. Tickets will be on sale at the American Automobile Association, and at the courts before the matches. JACK MUNHALL.

Rappahannock Show Title to Black Caddy

Fred Hughes, Jr.'s Jumper Clears 6 Feet 2 In. To Win Jumpoff With Mrs. Perry's Huntley Glen; Mrs. Watts Inky Takes Hunter Title

By Anne Hagner

Washington, Va., July 20.—Again proving worthy of his ranking with the country's finest open jumping horses, Lieut. Fred J. Hughes, jr's. Black Caddy thrilled more than 2,000 spectators at the closing of the Rappahannock County Horse Show near here today as he won a jump-off with Knockdown-and-Out Sweepstake event at 6 feet 2 inches.

The height of the fence was originally declared to be 6 feet 5½ inches but later measurement proved that it was 6 feet 2 inches at the point where the District-owned stallion cleared it. The top pole varied between 6 feet 3 inches at one end, and 6½ feet at the other, with a slight sag in the middle.

The jump-off was with Mr. and Mrs. Haggin Perry's Huntley Glen, Mrs. Perry riding. The well-built little mare soared over 6 feet with the smooth form of a hunter instead of the frequently more awkward style of a high-jumper, but the final mark proved to be just a little too high.

It was not the first exciting battle between the two horses, for Huntley Glen jumped off at the Washington Show last May with both Black Caddy and Gardner Hallman's Lady Jack, fourth-place winner today. At that time Lady Jack won the event at 6 feet, with Huntley Glen, then owned by Nancy Shaw, second.

Today's class saw Howard Butz's oft-retired 23-year-old gelding, Hobo, survive until the last two jump-offs and provide onlookers with an additional surprise as he ran out at the big fence and jumped the rail of the show ring, narrowly missing a large group of watchers. Rider Malvern Bell fell, but returned in a few moments to score a refusal and subsequent elimination.

The blue was awarded to Hughes amid a din of cheers that was surpassed only by loud urgings made previously by the crowd as the 13-year-old stallion went into each fence during the goings-on. Second went to Mrs. Perry's game mount, with Hobo placing third.

Such sky-exploring activities are old stuff to the Hughes-Caddy combination, for the pair have jumped off at 6 feet or more in three other shows. Most notable occasion was the record-shattering mark of 6 feet, 4½ inches, which they made at Arlington Hall in May.

Although the altitude business nearly stole the spotlight from the other division of the show, Mrs. George Watts Hill's Inky created plenty of interest by winning the hunter championship over Robert S. Water's Royalty II, reserve winner. Both horses went well during the two sweltering days of showing, but their victories could not be foretold prior to the championship preliminary because several other conformation horses earlier were in the running.

Other important triumphs came as Huntley Glen won in the Olympic class in the open division over a trick course, and Mrs. Altemus Whitney's Bon Nuit, ridden by Roland Ridgeway, won the blue in the Open Sweepstakes after two brilliant rounds.

Also of major interest to hunt country fans was the touch-and-out sweepstakes, which went to Edgewood Farm's Birthday Party. Alexander Rives had the mount on the consistent bay, which defeated Butz' Gigolette for the award.

Congratulations to Parks Champion

Mrs. Willie O'Steen Herbert (right) receives congratulations from Mrs. Margaret Keever after winning the public parks net championship yesterday on the Reservoir courts

Willie O'Steen Herbert Retains Tennis Title

Wins Public Parks Championship, Defeating Mrs. Keever; Allie Ritzenberg Captures Men's Crown for Second Consecutive Year

Willie O'Steen Herbert and Allie Ritzenberg retained their women's and men's Public Parks tennis championships at the Rock Creek courts yesterday, each employing a slashing, forcing game to blast his rival to straight-set defeat.

Mrs. Herbert, dethroned this season as City of Washington titleholder, won her first tournament of the year by routing dark horse Mrs. Margaret Keever, 6—2, 7—5. Ritzenberg repeated his last year's final-round victory over second-seeded Ray Stocklinski, winning this time, 6—2, 6—3, 6—1.

Stan Haney and Hy Ritzenberg gained the final round in men's doubles by upsetting the top-seeded team of George Herbert and John Smith in a three-set thriller. Haney and Ritzenberg won out, 1—6, 6—4, 8—6, only after their opponents had wasted three match points in the thirteenth game of the third set.

Mrs. Herbert, improved over her performances earlier in the season, had too much power for Mrs. Keever, who, in her first tournament here, had upset second-seeded Charlotte Decker in the first round. She was extended in the second set temporarily when Mrs. Keever smashed her service in the sixth game to tie the count at 3—3 and then hold to lead 4—3. But Mrs. Herbert bounced back to win the set by breaking through Mrs. Keever in the twelfth game.

The mixed doubles championship will be decided today.

Big Flash, timed in 2 minutes 3 3-5 seconds, paid $17.60 to win, $6.80 to place and $4.60 to show. Weigh Anchor paid $6.40 and $4.60, and Sweepida, $3.60.

Son of War finished fifth, with Royal Crusader, Tactician, Big Ben, Woof Woof, Bachelor Tom and Wee Toney trailing behind in that order. A twelfth entry, Enthrall, was declared out earlier today.

SIROCCO, vastly the best and still well in hand as he started up, after three-quarters swerved to the inside sharply when displacing GALLAHADION in the lead in the stretch turn, drew out under brisk pressure, but was taken in hand the last 50 yards. GALLAHADION, also stoutly restrainted early, moved up easily after reaching the final half mile, was eased a trifle as the winner came over on the stretch turn, but recovered quickly and weakened in the stretch drive, but held second safe. BIMELECH had speed from the start, was taken back to permit DIT to make the pace, moved to the latter under light hand riding leaving the backstretch, readily gave way to the winner and GALLAHADION after seven-eighths, and weakened suddenly when entering the stretch, but was gaining on GALLAHADION at the end. DIT was used up in the first three-quarters and quit badly from the effort. ALHALON was outclassed. ANDY K. began fast, ran out badly on the first turn and sulked thereafter.

100 Virginia Yearlings Go To Saratoga

Kilmer Consignment Largest to Be at Sales Starting Aug. 12

Special Dispatch to The Post

Richmond, July 20.—More than 100 choicely-bred yearlings from Virginia thoroughbred farms will be sent to the 1940 Saratoga Yearling Sales on August 12, according to the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce. At least 11 Virginia breeders will be represented in the sales. Possibly the largest group to be offered will be those from the stables of the late Willis Sharpe Kilmer at Court Manor in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. Indications point to the Court Manor group as numbering more than 40.

In 1939 Kilmer-breds won 269 races. In 1938 they were third on the list; in 1937 second. In the matter of money won Mr. Kilmer was a close second in 1939 with $336,951. This year, to July 6, his horses had won 173 races, 10 ahead of last year on the same date.

Sun Briar Represented

Among the youngsters destined for the Spa auctions are full brothers of Sun Egret, Nedayr, Gino Rex and Best Beau; full sisters of Galley Slave, Sun Alexandria and Lucky Omen; half-brothers of Sun Lover, Dark Winter and Suntica; half-sisters of Chance Sun and Dark Conquest.

The great Sun Briar heads the list of Kilmer stallions to be represented by offspring at Saratoga. Four colts and four fillies by the foundation stallion will be offered. To date, Sun Briar has sired the winners of over $2,191,000, including the winnings of such sons as Sun Beau, Pompey, Firethorn, Sun Egret and others.

Sun Beau, himself winner of $376,744, will have five yearlings sent into the ring. Sun Beau's youngsters have been bargains. Five of them sold at Saratoga in previous years—Impound, Sun Lover, Dark Beau, Belle Elan and Best Beau—cost their purchasers $12,300 collectively, and these five have won over $104,000 to date.

17 of Gino's to Be Sold

The gray Gino, all of whose 12 2-year-olds to start in 1939 won, will have 17 yearlings to represent him, including a full sister of the world's record-holder, Galley Slave, a full brother to Gino Rex, and a half-brother of Sun Lover.

Neddie, the son of Colin, will send three colts and four fillies to the market. Included are a full brother to Nedayr and half-brothers and sisters to Chance Sun, Floragina and Dark Conquest.

The newest Kilmer stallion, Hilltown, is a son of the imported Blenheim 2d. Hilltown is to be represented by five yearlings, including a full sister to Don Ameche's Californian winner, Shantytown, and a full brother to Doll Baby.

Parker, Kovacs Enter Finals In Eastern

Stars From West Dominate Tourney For East Honors

By the Associated Press

New York, July 20.—The Eastern Clay Court championships assumed an all-Western complexion today when three Californians resched the final rounds of the men's and women's tournaments, joining another Coast player who achieved the title round yesterday. The trio were Frank Parker, of Pasadena; Frank Kovacs, of Oakland, and Dorothy May Bundy, of Santa Monica.

Virginia Wolfenden, of San Francisco, entered the finals yesterday by defeating Defending Champion Millie Hirsh, of New York.

Kovacs and Parker beat back their semifinal opposition with ease. Kovacs routed Ken Bartelt, of Los Angeles, 6—3, 6—3, 6—3, and Parker tore through Ernie Sutter, of New Orleans, 6—0, 6—1, 6—0. Miss Bundy scored at 7—5, 6—4, over Pat Canning, of Alameda, Calif.

Sutter and his brother, Clifford, attained the doubles semifinal by default over Chauncey Steele and John Thacker, of New York. Kovacs teamed with Ed Amark, of San Francisco, to gain the final round with a 6—1, 6—3, 6—2 conquest of Tom Brown, of San Francisco, and Al Guerry, of Chattanooga. The other final berth will be decided tomorrow morning when the Sutter brothers meet Bartelt and Bill Reedy, of Los Angeles.

California's Dorothy May Bundy, and Baba Madden, of Boston, captured the women's doubles title by beating Sissy Madden, of Boston, and Nellie Sheer, of Miami, Fla., 8—6, 6—1.

adopted on United States tracks in 1932. The record is the $10,772.40 paid at Arlington Park on August 14, 1939.

Hagerstown played host to another 10,000 crowd as the record meeting was concluded. While the favorite players were given little to cheer about earlier in the day, the feature race went their way.

J. P. Flanagan's Summer Stock, recent winner of a sprint affair, went a mile and a sixteenth today in the Hancock Handicap and proved a galloping winner at a $5.40 pay off. Under Jockey Willie Dufford's handling, Summer Stock took command early and was jogging at the end, eight lengths ahead of P. C. Randolph's Repeat with Vinny Boy third in the field of eight.

Carson Kirk, Silver Spring, Md., boy, graduated from the apprentice class in the fourth race when he scored a front running victory with Tepin, a $13.40 shot. This was Kirk's fortieth winner and makes him a full-fledged jockey.

Good Service, Volleying Game Help McNeill Win Tennis Title

for a 1-0 lead, broke through Kramer in a deuced second game and again held to make the count three love.

Kramer braced in the fourth, clinching the game on a sizzling service ace, but McNeill, with the same service that Kramer was unable to break once in the entire match, ran his advantage to 4—1.

It was all over then. The last four games went to service, and McNeill won the set, 6—4. At the start of the third set both players were showing the effects of the burning sun and their own gruelling pace. McNeill still was the stronger, though, and broke through Kramer in the fifth with help of four errors to grab a lead that proved insurmountable.

Kramer, his face contracted into a perpetual frown of determination, fought to the end, but to no aval. McNeill, with characteristic impatience to end a match in the quickest possible time, never let down and finished up strongly, his volleying proving decisive. He allowed Kramer only 7 points in the first four games of the set, and only 20 altogether.

Total Point Score

The total point score was McNeill, 119, and Kramer, 93. The Oklahomian who succeeds Hal Surface as tournament champion, was credited with 20 placements and Kramer with but 8, a glowing tribute to the remarkable manner in which McNeill covered the court.

It was his consistently good service, speedy court coverage and ability to best Kramer in their many quick-fire volley exchanges at the net that won McNeill the match. Kramer, who experts believe is the coming national champion, showed a much improved backhand and a faster though more erractic service than McNeill. Kramer made eight clean service aces to one for McNeil. Don, however, won many points on serves that Kramer barely could reach.

Kramer also wasted few chances. His one major muff was in the ninth game of the first set when with the score at 4—4, he had a 40—15 lead on McNeill's service but permitted Don to win the game.

McNeill didn't lose a set in five tournament matches, being taken to deuced sets only twice, once by Elwood Cooke, his semifinals opponent, and by Kramer.

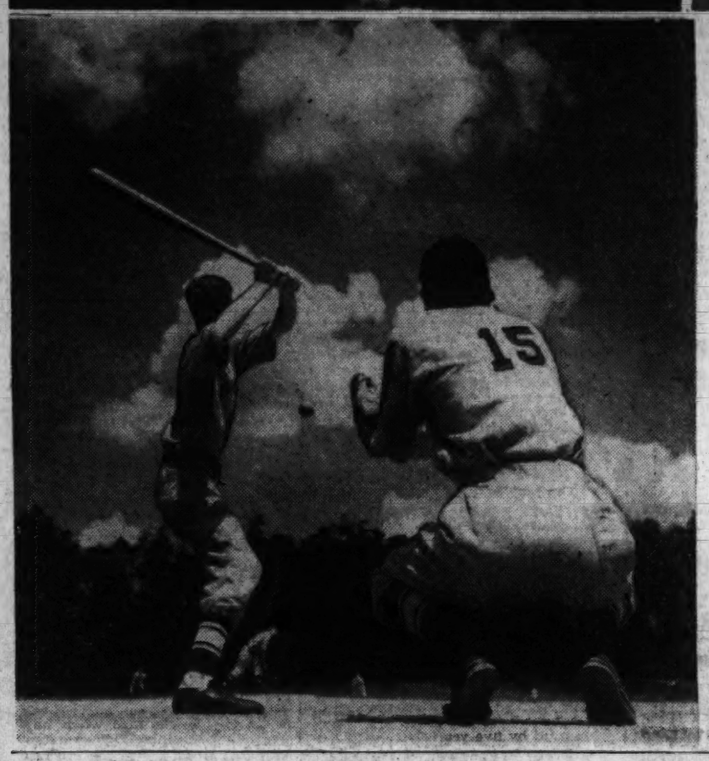
In the most exciting match of the afternoon the top-seeded men's doubles team of Henry Prusoff and Garnar Mulloy was upset by third-ranked Bobby Riggs and Welby Van Horn, 10—8, 6—3, 1—6, 6—3, 6—4.

Play for Title Today

Riggs and Van Horn will play for the title today against fourth-seeded Kramer and Teddy Schroeder, their match following the women's singles finals at 2 between top-ranked Alice Marble and second-seeded Pauline Betz. Following the men's doubles will be a mixed doubles exhibition between national champions Alice Marble and Riggs, and Nina Brown, England, and McNeill.

In the Prusoff-Mulloy, Riggs-Horn first set there was no service break until the seventeenth game when Prusoff lost his on a double fault followed by two placements by Riggs. The third set was practically given to the losers on errors, but it needled Prusoff and Mulloy with new life and they also won the fourth set to square the match. In the deciding set services were held until the ninth when Prusoff again double faulted to drop the game. Riggs and Van Horn swept through the final two games with loss of only one point.

Greenbelt Goes Sports-Minded in a Big Way; Everybody Has Fun



Post Staff Photos—McCoy.

As the result of much hard work on the part of two men and a woman, the "Metropolis" of Greenbelt, Md., with a population of 3,000 people, has one of the most complete athletic set-ups in this part of the country. Those largely responsible for the success of the recreation program are Vincent Holoquist, Ben Goldfadden and Miss Doris Dungan. Pictures show a few of the varied activities being promoted. Starting at lower left and going around the lay-out are baseball, girls' softball, archery, swimming and tennis

'Metropolis' Offers Residents a Varied Athletic Program

By Al Hailey

Speaking of nominations, comes now a nomination for the All-American township of these United States—Greenbelt, Md., the sports-loving party's choice.

It behooves this party to nominate Greenbelt because there's hardly a sport you can name that isn't developed to a high degree in this little Government experiment city just over the District line on the No. 1 highway.

Greenbelt has a three-man recreation department, or rather two men and a woman—Vincent Holoquist, Ben Goldfadden and Doris Dungan—and yet the sports program for this "metropolis" of some 3,000 persons has one of the most perfectly organized sports programs in this half of the 48 States. Here's the picture:

An assortment of some 30 hard and softball teams, the Greenbelt Athletic Club boasting two leagues, a four-team women's and girls' league, a four-team boys' league, a special Sunday school league, a crack tennis team and no end of sports instruction in the art of swimming, archery, horseshoes. Even marbles has its place.

Braden a Godfather of Sports

Godfather of the whole sports program at Greenbelt is none other than Town Manager Roy S. Braden, a former ball player and track man. Intensely interested in sports, Braden has taken a personal pride in whipping Greenbelt's populace into a sports mood, and the past two years have seen a tremendous growth in athletic activity in the "model town."

With 27 years the average of Greenbelt adults, there is little wonder that the program has gone forward with leaps and bounds. Main source of wonder, however, is that the town fathers are able to map out a program that takes care of all who reside there—and that's just what the schedule does.

The Greenbelt softball club, the "Reps," won the Prince Georges County pennant last year and won the first-half title again this year. They meet Carr & Boswell, second-half winner this year, in a playoff for the county title on July 28, August 4 and August 11. The "Reps" also are second in the Metro Afternoon League, the District's strongest softball loop.

In regular baseball, Greenbelt is represented by the Shamrocks, who have won 14 games and lost but three this year, according to Goldfadden.

Women Have League

But what, you probably are thinking, of the women. There's no need for perturbation—the ladies are amply, if not more so, cared for.

It's like this—the Greenbelt A. C. includes a women's and girls' league of chosen teams, and the play in this loop is one of the main sources of rivalry in the closely knit township.

The boys' league consists of "block teams"—A, C, D and E, and there's also a special club team for lads under 19. Incidentally, Julius Andrus, an 18-

Bogart Enters Finals Of Invitation Tourney

D. C. Champion Beats Medalist, One Up, In Shenecossett Golf

By the Associated Press

Eastern Point, Conn., July 20.—Ralph Bogart, 20-year-old District champion, of Washington, D. C., today defeated 17-year-old Bobby Patrick, of Norwich, the medalist, by a margin of one up in a spine-tingling battle of birdies to go into the final round of the Shenecossett Men's Invitation Tournament.

Bogart played the 17 holes in 70, two under par, and Patrick carded a 71, as each collected three birdies in a contest that wasn't settled until the Norwich youth missed a birdie on the eighteenth, where his 20-foot putt bounced off the back of the cup, giving his rival an easy half.

Bogart goes into the 36-hole final tomorrow against Eddie Foy, of Montclair, N. J., who breezed through a 4-and-3 triumph over Walter O'Rourke, 40-year-old Brooklyn lawyer.

The Bogart-Patrick duel was nip and tuck. Bogart won the first two holes with a birdie and a par, but Patrick came back with birdies on the fifth, seventh and eighth and added the ninth with a par to round the turn two up. Bogart sank putts of 18 and 20 feet for birdies at the tenth and eleventh to pull up level and won the fourteenth with a par to take a one-up lead, which he held to the finish.

Bogart entered the semifinals by defeating Jimmy Batterson, of Hartford, two up, while Foy won his quarter-final from Tony Kosinski, of Bridgeport, defender of the Marston-Shenecossett Trophy, by a like margin.

Bob Barnett, Mrs. Lacey Plan Lady-Pro Golf

Chevy Chase Course To Be Scene of Event, July 29

Chevy Chase Professional Robert Barnett and District Women's Golf Association President Mrs. Robert A. Lacey, have completed plans for a lady-pro tournament to be held next Monday, July 29, at Chevy Chase.

Barnett is lining up between 15 and 20 District professionals and assistant pros for the 18-hole best ball tourney while Mrs. Lacey is inviting the low handicapped women golfers. They will be called from the one and two handicapped players up to the eight or nine.

The women golfers will receive full handicaps while pairings will be made by placing all the names in a hat and drawing for partners. The event will start around 3 p. m.

Meanwhile, Raymond Willett, Woodmont assistant pro, aided by his boss, Gene Larkin, has made final arrangements for the District assistant pro championship next Wednesday, July 31, at Woodmont. The tourney will be played over the 36 hole route, with the boys contributing $5 each to the purse while the professionals are also expected to give the pot a boost.

Al Houghton Favored On Columbia Course

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The Middle Atlantic golf professionals take over the week's golf spotlight with two of the most important tournaments of the year scheduled Tuesday and Friday, the Maryland State Open championship at Columbia and the sectional qualifying rounds for the National P. G. A. at Five Farms, respectively.

Today four team matches, all over local courses, feature the tournament card. Anacostia will attempt to hold its lead in the public links Davis Trophy play in a match with Rock Creek over the former's course. Al Price will lead a score of the uptown publinks boys against Bill Carson's southeast club, winner of eight matches in nine starts.

The annual rivalry between Suburban and Woodmont will be revived over the latter's course with the Henry I. Kaufman Trophy at stake. Pros Gene Larkin, of Woodmont, and Middle Atlantic P. G. A. President Ralph Beach will lead their respective lineups.

Home-and-Home Series

Army and Navy will play host to Washington Golf and Country Club's 16-man team in the first half of a home-and-home series. Fourth match of the day is the annual intra-club event at Indian Spring with John Buchman's Giants once again challenging Dr. A. Thomas Utz' Midgets, with the losers footing the bill for a crab feast.

Tomorrow, 30 or 40 amateurs and professionals are expected to test Columbia's course in a practical round for the Maryland championship, to be played Tuesday over the 36-hole route.

The way Al Houghton has been hitting the ball of late, the four-time former champion will be the favorite to win the $120 top prize. Host Pro Freddie McLeod complains of a poor putting streak, but if he should suddenly snap out of it the 1908 National Open Champion may pull a surprise on the "youngsters."

Entries for the Maryland Open championship close today with Dr. R. A. Keilty at the Columbia Country Club. The entry fee for pros is $5 and amateurs $3.

Hot Battle Is Seen

Four places to the National P. G. A. championship at Hershey, Pa., August 26-31, will be open to the Middle Atlantic Professionals Friday in the 36-hole qualifying tests over the Five Farms course of the Baltimore Country Club.

A field of about 35 is expected, and the battle for the places will be the hottest in years as the national championship scene is only 120 miles away.

The P. G. A. qualifying rounds were held at Five Farms two years ago with Wiffy Cox leading the field, a position he is expected to hold at the conclusion of the twin rounds on Friday. Andy Gibson and Leo Walper also qualified that year, the latter winning a playoff over Mel Shorey.

The pros will be on hand Thursday for a practice round.

Delaware Boat Takes Lead in Gibson Races

By the Associated Press

Gibson Island, Md., July 20.—Amassing 45 points, Aries II, piloted by Henry Wilmer, jr., of the Delaware River fleet, today took the lead in the competition for the J. Rulon Miller star boat trophy.

Aries led the pack by taking second place in the first heat yesterday and finishing sixth today. Duchess, skippered by Bill Crouse, of the south Jersey fleet, was in the runner-up position with 43 points.

President's Cup Regatta Dates Are Set

September 27, 28, 29 Dates Approved by Boat Officials

Washington followers of power-boat racing were cheered yesterday by news that new dates for the President's Cup Regatta have been given the official sanction of the A. P. B. R. C., through Secretary Charles F. Chapman. The event will be held September 27, 28, 29.

Chapman's letter expressing the new dates were agreeable was received here by R. Aubrey Bogley, Regatta race chairman, and said in part:

"The commission heartily indorses the later dates, due to the fact that the equinox will be changed along about September 27, thus assuring smoother water for the powerboat drivers."

Meantime, from all quarters have come praise for the new setup for launching and hoisting the big inboards near the Washington airport. Bogley said that this year there would be no long haul to the Navy Yard for the drivers, and that they would have a much shorter distance to go for repairs.

Kauffman, 3-Time Muny Champ, to Play

By the Associated Press

Detroit, July 20.—The entry of Carl F. Kauffman, of Pittsburgh, three-time champion, has been accepted for the nineteenth annual National Public Links Golf tournament, it was announced today by Joseph C. Dey, jr., executive secretary of the United States Golf Association.

Kauffman's status in the tournament which opens at the Rackham Municipal Course here Monday was determined today by the public links committee of the U. S. G. A. Doubt concerning his eligibility for the tournament arose because of his ownership of a driving range. Dey said the committee found absolutely no evidence to substantiate a charge of professionalism in connection with operation of the range and that Kauffmann would arrive in Detroit tomorrow.

Addition of Kaufmann to the field brings five former champions into action in this year's event. The others are Andrew Szwedko, also of Pittsburgh, the defending champion; Al Leach, of Cleveland, the 1938 victor; David A. Mitchell, of Atlanta, 1934 titlist, and Charles Ferrera, of San Francisco, 1931 and 1933 champion.

3-Time Champion

Kaufmann won in 1927, 1928 and 1929 and was finalist in 1926. He opened a driving range several years ago after his physician had urged him to obtain outdoor employment.

Eighteen holes of the qualifying round will be played on Monday and eighteen more on Tuesday with the 64 low scorers earning the right to continue in match play. Also at stake in the medal competition is the Warren G. Harding team trophy, now held by Los Angeles. Smiley Quick, who set a new record of 66 for the par 7- Rackham course in a practice round on Thursday, is a member of the Los Angeles team. The others are Neil Whitney and William C. Train.

Washington, D. C.'s three-man Harding Cup team, Kenneth Zent, Andy Oliveri and John Jankowski, played their second practice round over the layout today and reported favorable scores. Bob Morris also represents the Nation's Capital in the tournament for the second consecutive year.

One Team Withdraws

The number of teams in the competition was reduced from 34 to 33 today by the withdrawal of John Teal, of Jacksonville, Fla. Jacksonville now has only two entrants—Telfair Ghioto and R. C. Wheeler. Teal's place in the field of 192 went to Kauffmann.

The qualifying record for the tournament is 139 and is held jointly by George Aulbach, of Boston, and Don Errickson, of Alhambra, Calif. Aulbach set the mark in 1922 at Toledo while Errickson equaled it at San Francisco in 1937.

A majority of the 192 contestants, survivors of an original entry of 2,601 players, were on hand today for practice rounds.

Szwedko scored a three-over-par 74 in his first tour of the course, terming it a "difficult test of golf."

Featuring the trial rounds tomorrow will be an East vs. West four-ball match. Szwedko and a partner not yet selected will face Quick and Louis Jennings, of Portland, Oreg.

The Rackham course measures 6,580 yards and is situated on slightly rolling land.

St. Paul Open Lures Touring Pro Players

By the Associated Press

St. Paul, July 20.—The Nation's touring professional golfers, lured by $7,500 in cash, will make the Keller golf course in St. Paul their next stopping place, with the annual St. Paul Open set for next Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

In the field will be such stars as Lawson Little, the National Open champion; Harry Cooper, who has taken a small fortune out of previous St. Paul tourneys, and Dick Metz, whose par-blasting total of 270 copped first money a year ago.

Play will get under way Friday with 18 holes. An additional 18 holes on Saturday will be followed by 36 on Sunday.

Among top amateur players will be Jim Ferrier, of Sydney, Australia, Amateur and Open champion, and Wilford Wehrle, of Chicago, low amateur in the tournament a year ago.

Alice Marble, Riggs Are Seeded First

Seabright, N. J., July 20 (AP).—National Champions Bobby Riggs and Alice Marble were seeded today at the top of the draw for the Seabright invitation tennis tournament opening Monday.

Frankie Parker was seeded No. 2 and was followed by Welby Van Horn, Elwood Cooke and Bryan Grant, jr., Ladislav Hecht, former Czecho-Slovakian Davis Cup player, and G. Lyttleton-Rogers, Irish internationalists, were the only foreigners seeded in the men's division.

Miss Marble was followed by Helen Jacobs, Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan and Helen Bernhard in the field of 32 women. The British Wightman Cup players, Mary Hardwick, Nina Brown and Rita Jarvis, and Mme. Sylvia Henrotin were seeded in order named on the foreign list.

Virginia Hunting Dates Remain Unchanged

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., July 20.—The Virginia Game Commission agreed after a public hearing today to leave the general hunting season dates as they are, but decided to reduce the daily bag limit on quail from ten to eight.

The decision was something of a compromise between commission attempts to satisfy requirements of the U. S. Biological Survey, which is allowing the State funds for work with game, and the wishes of sportsmen, who said at the hearing today that they were opposed to curtailment or changes in the season.

The general season affects wild turkeys, quail, grouse and rabbits.

Proposal Rejected

In eastern Virginia it will continue to run from November 20 to January 20, as last year. Under the commission's own proposal, which it rejected today, the season would have been from November 20 to January 5, or approximately 15 days less than last year.

West of the Blue Ridge the season will continue to be November 15 to December 31. The rejected plan would have provided the same hunting season as east of the Blue Ridge—from November 20 to January 5.

Approximately 50 sportsmen, representing many others throughout the State, appeared at the hearing today to protest any more shortening of the season, particularly as far as it would reduce days open for quail shooting. They argued that both sportsmen and landowners were against the plan.

Several of the spokesmen said they were agreeable to the idea of reducing the daily bag limit.

Limit Unchanged

Carl Nolting, commission chairman, said no change was made in the season limit of 150 quail. That limit is a difficult one to enforce, anyway.

The Federal agency is allowing the State $38,000, of which Nolting said approximately $12,000 was used for quail. Nolting said the Biological Survey, in return had sought the commission's assistance in conservation of game.

Taylor Robertson, a Richmond newspaper hunting and fishing columnist, said at the hearing he had talked with many men in eastern Virginia concerning the proposed curtailment of the season and found none who wished it. He offered protesting petitions from Lancaster County, Petersburg and Columbia, Va.

Most hunters, he said, believe that there are as many partridges as there were last year, despite the winter's severity.

Shorten at Start

Delegate Howard Holleman, of Surry County, said sentiment there was opposed to shortening the season, but that if it was to be done, the cutting off should be done in the fall, at the start. Other speakers who opposed curtailment also said that if it must be done, the commission should shorten the season at the start.

Bucky Allows Giants Only 3 Hits; Lohrma Jinx Hurler, Gives All Runs in 5-1 Loss

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, July 20.—Bucky Walters trotted out his hurling handcuffs today, snapped them securely on the New York Giants and tossed a three-hitter to give the Reds a 5-to-1 victory for his fourteenth win of the year.

In tightening their grip on first place in the National League, the Rhinelanders got to their old "jinx," Bill Lohrman, for all five of their runs before he headed for the showers in the seventh. Lohrman whipped them four times out of five last year, but he was well walloped today as the Reds piled up 13 hits.

A three-run blast in the sixth put the game on ice. In this frame, an error by Mickey Witek, who took over the Giants' shortstop chores after Billy Jurges retired because of the heat, and doubles by Ival Goodman, Mike McCormick and Harry Craft accounted for the runs. Craft's two-bagger knocked the final two tallies across.

Walters just toyed with the Giants. He had a no-hitter for three frames. Then, in the fourth, Babe Young's sixth homer of the year ruined that and gave the Giants their only run.

This tied the score, since Ernie Lombardi's single had driven a Red home in the first. After Young's two-bagger, the Reds came right back in their half of the fourth to go in front again, never to be headed. Walters, himself, accounted for this run, sending it in with a long fly.

Bucky was red hot out there on the mound. Except for Young's homer, the only hits were Tony Cuccinello's single leading off the fifth and Johnny McCarthy's pinch-double with one away in the eighth. He walked four and fanned three.

Pirates Shell Six Hurlers, Beat Bees, 17-6

Bucs Blast Out 22 Hits; 7th-Inning Onslaught Wins

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, July 20.—The Boston Bees ran into their worst nightmare of the season today as the Pirates blasted six pitchers for 22 hits and a 17 to 6 triumph.

Casey Stengel's club had all the better of the fray until the seventh when the Corsairs went on a rampage and counted nine runs. Four more tallies in the eighth added insult to injury.

Fifteen Pirate batters went to the plate in the hectic seventh. Debs Garms got two hits during the frame and four for the afternoon.

Mace Brown was the winning pitcher, coming in during the seventh when big Max Butcher failed in a relief hitch for Joe Bowman.

An early feature was Pirate Arky Vaughan's homer inside the park. His drive traveled 457 feet to the fence in direct center field.

Everything Happens On Dodger Road Trip

Correspondent Dizzy After 18-Day Trip With 10 Other Writers; Flying Bats, Fights, Babies and Bean Balls Featured

By George Kirksey.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

St. Louis, Mo., July 20.—Traveling with the Brooklyn Dodgers is like living in Grand Hotel, nothing happens every minute.

The Dodgers are winding up an 18-day road trip today and tomorrow against the Cardinals, and the turnstile count will show that the boys from Flatbush are the most popular drawing card in baseball. In the 20 games they've played on this trip until today they've drawn approximately 237,000 paid customers. You have to go all the way back to the days of Babe Ruth to find drawing power like that on the road.

Is it any wonder when you consider what kind of a show the Dodgers put on day in and day out? They not only play hustling, fighting baseball, but they are always giving the customers that extra something which makes the fans want to see 'em. And life is not exactly dull for the correspondents—11 of them—traveling with the Dodgers.

Day-by-Day Account

Here are some of the things that have been happening in the Dodger family since they left home June 30:

A general free-for-all between the Cubs and Dodgers, with Claude Passeau flinging a bat at Hugh Casey.

Hugh Casey beaned by a class D pitcher in an exhibition game at Johnstown, Pa.

Birth of a son to Pitcher Whit Wyatt, who flew to and from his wife's bedside in Atlanta between pitching assignments.

A 20-inning battle with the Bees which lasted 5 hours and 19 minutes, a record by the clock for one game.

Camilli Hurt

Dolf Camilli, one of the league's most rugged players, being rendered hors de combat by Buddy Hassett's knee in a collision in Boston.

PeeWee Reese, one of the league's best base runners, being caught off second in Pittsburgh with the tying run with two out, and Joe Medwick at bat.

That gives you a rough idea of what to expect when the Dodgers come to town. This trip isn't exceptional. Something's been happening wherever the Dodgers have been all season. PeeWee Reese and Joe Medwick were beaned by Jake Mooty, Cubs, and Bow Bowman, respectively. Manager Leo Durocher and Mickey Owen, of the Cardinals, engaged in fisticuffs. Larry MacPhail challenged the whole Cardinal team to battle when Medwick was beaned, and ended up by making a speech to the St. Louis players in their clubhouse after the series, in which he congratulated them on their sportsmanship.

Tex Carleton pitched a no-hit, no-run game against the Reds. Pee Wee Reese tried to pull the squeeze play with the bases filled against the Giants but failed, and then hit a homer. Freddy Fitzsimmons, signed as a pitcher-coach, has won 8 out of 9 games and leads all National League pitchers. Luke Hamlin threatened to jump the club because of a tongue-lashing from MacPhail.

Life with the Dodgers is everything but dull.

California Fight Body Breaks With New York Board

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, July 20.—The California State Athletic Commission voted today to rescind its working agreement with the New York State Athletic Commission because of moves of the Eastern body to "monopolize" championship fights.

The action was the result of agreements which the New York commision was reported to have forced Henry Armstrong, welterweight champion, and Lew Jenkins, lightweight titleholder, to sign, requiring them to make their next title defense in New York.

California and New York have worked together for years, remaining apart from the National Boxing Association.

Man of the Month

The Man of the Month contest is sponsored jointly by The Washington Post and Station WJSV. Following each of the Nats' games, Arch McDonald will award points to Washington players as he deems performances merit. The Man of the Month will be presented with a $50 merchandise order by The Post.

By Arch McDonald
Station WJSV Baseball Broadcaster

Despite his defeat, Sidney Hudson was the stand-out performer for the Nats yesterday and thus takes the lead in the Man of the Month contest. Points were awarded as follows:

To Hudson, ten points, because he allowed only eight hits, because three of the four runs against him were due to misplays, and because he made one of the Nats' seven hits.

To George Case, six points, because he made the Nats' only run possible by beating out a bunt and stealing second base, and because he made two of the Nats' seven hits.

To Cecil Travis, two points, because he singled twice.

The totals:

Sidney Hudson	51	Buddy Lewis	17
Buddy Myer	43	Zeke Bonura	10
Rick Ferrell	32	Alex Carrasquel	10
Cecil Travis	29	Jimmy Bloodworth	5
George Case	27	Sammy West	5
Gee Walker	26	Walter Masterson	3
Jimmy Pofahl	20	Johnny Welaj	2
Dutch Leonard	19	Willis Hudlin	2

The Nats operated without Buddy Lewis in the last four innings . . . Umpire Cal Hubbard listened only so long to Lewis' squawks on a decision at first base and then ejected him from the game . . . Sammy West went to right field for the Nats and it was just as well, because only West could have caught Heffner's long drive to right center in the eighth . . . the Browns' victory was only their second in their last 16 games . . . Niggeling showed the best knuckle ball in the league with the exception of Dutch Leonard's . . . unlike Leonard, Niggeling throws his knuckler with a semi-sidearm delivery . . . the Nats know now how those other clubs feel about facing a knuckle ball . . . Rip Radcliff, who spoiled a no-hit game for Hudson last month, made the Browns' first hit yesterday, an infield single in the second inning.

Mrs. T. J. Regan, Horse Breeder, Dies in Ky.

Special Dispatch to The Post

Nashville, Tenn., July 20.—Mrs. Thomas J. Regan, 58-year-old internationally known horse breeder, whose husband is business agent for Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, died at Vanderbilt Hospital here this morning at 1:30. Mrs. Regan had been in ill health for several weeks.

An expert in thoroughbred horses, Mrs. Regan for many years specialized in saddle and gaited animals, but more recently had turned to the breeding of racing horses. At the time of her death Mrs. Regan was operating the Pilot Knob Stock Farm, in nearby Sumner County, and had in her stables more than 100 thoroughbreds.

For many years Mrs. Regan operated a stock farm in Lexington, Ky., and in 1928 one of her yearlings brought a world record price of $75,000 for a horse of that age. Her farms had produced numerous stake winners, including Brooms, winner of the Hopeful and other classic turf contests; Time Flight, Transmutable, Commuter, Cockrell, Dogaway, Magic Stream and Imprudent.

In recent years Mrs. Regan had confined her interests mainly to fillies bred by her and which later served as brood mares on her farm.

In addition to her husband, Mrs. Regan is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Constance R. Connors, of Middleburg, Va., Mrs. Jean R. McKinney, of Long Island, and Middleburg, Va., a son, Gordon Regan, of New York City, and a granddaughter, Kathleen McKinney.

Water Events Mark Letts' 'Olympics'

Davy Jones, Robert Leonard Pace Camp's Games

Water events in the annual "Olympics" being held at Camp Letts, the Central Y. M. C. A.'s camp for boys on the Rhode River, near Annapolis, get under way today, with Davy Jones and Robert Leonard, pace-setters so far, ready to continue their drive for top honors.

Both in the intermediate age group, Davy and Robert have 33 and 32½ points, respectively, latest reports disclosed. Track and field events, staged over a three-weeks period, have been going on for the past week, with boys from 8 to 18 taking part.

Jones has firsts in the broad and high jumps, while Leonard took second in both these events and won first place with the discus. Dick Jones, a junior, with a grand total of 20 points, and Robert Brewer, a senior, with 25 points lead their age groups.

The athletic program was set in motion by a "grand march" led by the camp Drum and Bugle Corps, and a torch was carried by a runner to light the "Olympic Fire" in keeping with the tradition of the real Olympic games.

Amateur Ball Officials Plan River Cruise

Moonlight Jaunt Down Potomac Tuesday Pays For Birmingham Trip

Washington's amateur baseball fathers are going to emulate the "ancient mariner" Tuesday night by setting forth upon the Potomac for a cruise down to Marshall Hall and back in an attempt to raise funds to provide transportation to Birmingham, Ala., for the District's 1940 sandlot champions.

The National Capitol Amateur Baseball Federation has chartered the new streamlined Wilson liner, the Mount Vernon, for the pleasure trip, and the steamer leaves the Wilson Line pier promptly at 8:30 p. m., rain or shine.

Proceeds from the moonlight cruise will pay the expenses of the winners of the District play-offs to the national tournament in Birmingham in September. Lon Warneke Wins Seventh Of Year, 3-2

Medwick's Home Run In First Inning Gives Flock Lead; Orengo Is Star

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, July 20.—Long Lon Warneke fed Ducky Medwick a home run ball with one out in the first inning today, but clamped down tight after that and pitched the Cardinals to a 3-to-2 victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers. The defeat dropped the Dodgers to four full games behind Cincinnati in the National League race.

The deciding run in this tight pitching duel came across in the seventh when Joe Orengo tripled to center and continued home on Dixie Walker's bad throw to the infield, thus giving long Lon his seventh win of the year.

Warneke gave up ten hits altogether, while the Cards were collecting only seven off Tex Carleton and Curt Davis, the losing pitcher.

The Dodgers started off as though they were going to send Warneke to the showers. Cookie Lavagetto singled and Medwick knocked his eighth four-bagger into the left field stands. The Cards came back with one in the second on Ernie Koy's triple and Warneke's single, and tied it up in the sixth on Mickey Owen's bunt-single and Johnny Hopp's double. Then Orengo broke up the ball game.

First Marlin Is Boated at Ocean City

Florida-New York Sportsman Lands Seven-Foot Gamester

Special Dispatch to The Post

Ocean City, Md., July 20.—The first marlin of the season in this section of the angling sport was landed today by Leland Sperry, sportsman of Delray Beach, Fla., and Saratoga, N. Y., after a battle of three-quarters of an hour. Sterry, who is en route to his New York home with Maurice G. Field, of Delray Beach and Greenwich, Conn., had the time of his life during the struggle with the gamester.

Fishing from Capt. Sanderson's cruiser, The Fun, he played the fish, which leaped clear of the water six times, "tail-walking" almost 100 feet on the final attempt to free himself. The prize, most coveted by all fishermen, measured 7 feet in length and weighed 39¾ pounds, with a tail spread of 18¾ inches and a girth of 22 inches. The spear measured 20 inches.

Last year anglers enjoyed an excellent season hereabouts, boating a reported total of 1,343 of the gamesters.

Milwaukee Brewers Appoint Ray Schalk as Manager

Former Star Catcher Succeeds Mickey Heath Today

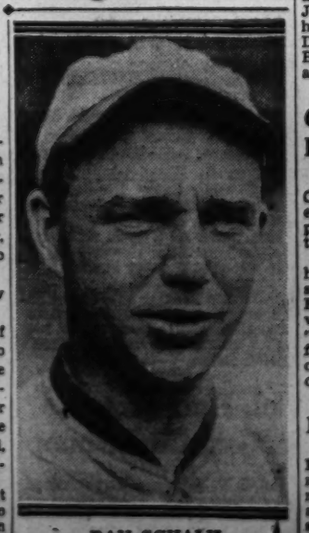
By the Associated Press

Milwaukee, July 20.—The Milwaukee Brewer American Association baseball club announced today acceptance of the resignation of Minor Wilson (Mickey) Heath as manager and appointment of Ray Schalk, former Chicago White Sox star, to succeed him.

Schalk will take over his new duties tomorrow.

Heath was appointed manager of the Brewers after the 1938 season to succeed the late Alan Sothoron. He had been the Milwaukee first baseman since 1937, coming here after several years with Rochester, in the International League; Cincinnati, of the National League, and Hollywood, in the Pacific Coast circuit.

The Milwaukee club, in recent weeks, slipped from third place to one-half game from the bottom in the association.



RAY SCHALK

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, July 20.—The tighest American League pennant race in years may be loosened with a wheeze, like a belt after dinner, at the Yankee Stadium this week-end when the Detroit Tigers play a crucial series against the Yanks.

CONSIDINE

A double victory tomorrow for the league-leading Tigers, who have been looking behind them like a top-hatted swell walking down Tenth avenue at night, would bolster not only their fading spirits but also their diminishing league lead. It would be like stopping the enemy at Sedan. But if the Yanks break through and hang a couple of cans on the Tigers' tail (as they serenely expect to do) it is going to take brass knuckles to stop them between now and the end of September.

For the Yanks are coming! And coming in a way that leaves their opponents dazed and incoherent. We don't expect to hear another peep out of those Cleveland Indians, after what the Yanks did to them this past week. We have a hunch that when the season is over that 13-inning victory over Bobby Feller will be called the crucial game of the year. The Yanks were like a car struggling up a steep hill before that epic battle. And when Bill Dickey slapped the game-winning hit at the end, the Yanks began running down hill, breathing easier, piling up the old momentum that swept them to four straight pennants.

The Tigers came to town today with Buck Newsom's thumb in a cast, and that puts one strike on them. The ailing of peppy little Dick Bartell and of Pinky Higgins puts another strike on them. Of course, if the Tigers whirl around and win a couple tomorrow, it is going to mean a lot to them. And one of the things it will mean is that the Yanks have absorbed one of the last set-backs they can afford to absorb, if they expect to hand Uncle Jim Farley a pennant this fall when he takes over.

The Tiger-Yankee series is curious. It isn't often that a series at this stage of the season between a league-leader and a fourth place outfit is important. But there is an important psychological aspect to this one. Ball clubs can be whipped spiritually just as surely as can an individual, and this is the time of the year when intrinsically unsound teams begin to buckle. It is the strategic moment when the Yanks have started their putsch, and though three clubs still lie ahead of them, the champs actually have them all on the defensive.

What has come over the Yanks? It's hard to put your finger on it. Last year they won on pitching, and when they didn't get it this year they flopped like a circus seal. Then they seemed to say, "Well, if we can't get pitching we'll just get more runs than the other side." Their hitting against Cleveland was old time Yankee bombarding. It averaged .283 for the team for the three games, but included in the 29 hits made off Feller, Milnar, Smith, etc., were doubles by Rolfe, Henrich, Rosar and Mills, triples by Rosar and Mills and homeruns by Rosar, Dahlgren, each two; Rolfe, DiMaggio, Gordon and Dahlgren.

But that doesn't tell the whole story. The club is up on its toes again after being guilty of some rather listless baseball. There hasn't been an alerter piece of base-running pulled this year than when Babe Dahlgren raced home from third base after Feller carelessly dropped a throw-back from Rollie Hemsley the other day. It hurt Cleveland, too, for New York eventually won by one run. Lefty Gomez is headed back, too. He was better than ample Friday until he was hurt, and he wasn't hurt badly enough to affect him very long. Joe McCarthy expects him to take up a lot of that slack in the Yankee pitching between now and World Series time.

Joe McCarthy didn't have to look at the league standing to realize that the Yanks were recapturing their old zing. Nor did he have to look at his enlivened athletes. His telephone told him. Guys he hasn't heard from for months began calling him up after the Yanks beat Feller, giving him that "h'ya, old pal" stuff. Fair weather friends, who ran from him as if he were a leper when the Yanks stumbled into last place, were back in full force, telling him they were with him all the time, calling him the greatest manager of all time, slapping his back raw, and bringing up the little matter of having him leave a couple of seats for them for the doubleheader.

Greenberg Has Perfect Day at Plate

Gets Triple, Double And Two Singles; Rookie Gives 8 Hits; Red Ruffing Routed

By the Associated Press

New York, July 21.—The hopes of the world champion Yankees for getting back on the pennant trail were given a rude setback today by the Detroit Tigers, who clawed out a 3-to-1 victory to continue their mastery of the American League.

The Yanks ran afoul of eight-hit hurling by Hal Newhouser, Detroit's 19-year-old rookie southpaw, and a persistent offensive led by Hank Greenberg. The slugger had a perfect day at the plate with a triple, a double and two singles as his contribution to the Tiger total of 10 hits.

The Tigers started their trouble against Red Ruffing, who gave up one run and three hits in four innings before retiring with a sore arm. Steve Sundra worked the rest of the way, and Ruffing was charged with his seventh loss.

The run off Rufus the Red came in the third inning when Red Kress led off with a three-bagger and eventually scored on a fly by Barney McCosky. Kress and McCosky greeted Sundra with a pair of doubles and a run when he came on duty in the fifth. And in the sixth Greenberg tripled and scored on Rudy York's long fly.

This proved the end of Detroit's scoring, although the Tigers loaded the bases with none out in the eighth.

The crowd of 16,868 got their only kick in the sixth when Joe DiMaggio extended his hitting streak to 15 consecutive contests with a single that drove home Red Rolfe, who had singled.

The victory kept Detroit a game and a half ahead of the Indians, and dropped the Yanks back to five games off the pace.

Art Mahan Stars At Bat With Four Hits, Including Homer

By International News Service

Chicago, July 20.—Philadelphia today recorded a 9-to-3 decision over the Cubs, pounding 16 safeties off French, Lee, Page and Raffensberger.

The Phils jumped away to a two-run lead in the second inning and scored two more in the fourth when Art Mahan homered. Four hits were enough for four runs off Page and Raffensberger in the eighth. Mahan's fourth hit sent in the last Philadelphia tally in the ninth.

Bill Nicholson, of the Cubs, reached Ike Pearson, winning hurler, for a two-run circuit clout in the sixth.

All-Star Game Wallop Made N.L. Hero of West

Three-Run Wallop Put Boston Outfielder Among Bright Stars

On the wings of his All-Star game home run, Boston's "Big Bee," Max West, became the toast of the baseball world, the player of the year, the star of the All-Stars. To a host of fans far and wide, this West wallop ushered in a brand-new hero. To National Leaguers it was a "natural."

Four other National League club owners spent many hours of good business-office time last winter trying to spend money for West. Doubloons by the thousands were offered to lure him from the Hub Hive. He was the one best buy—a rising young superslugger climbing the ladder of fame to the joy of his discoverer and manager, the eminent Dr. Charles Dillon Stengel, and the rapture of Boston's royal rooters.

One swallow doesn't make a summer, but one swing can make a slugger famous from coast to coast in this fortunate land, provided he chooses his time and place as skillfully as Max did on the afternoon of July 9, 1940, at bat in St. Louis, with two on base, the score 0 to 0, the American League All-Star team lined up against him and all other major league warfare suspended so the Nation's fandom could concentrate on the midsummer classic for supremacy of the baseball world.

Three-Run Wallop

Three of the runs making up the 4-0 final score rode home when Max wafted his homer into the right-centerfield pavilion of historic Sportsman's Park before the American League had retired a single National League batter in the first inning. In the top of the second inning West made another heroic gesture, a leap against the rightfield wall trying to spear Luke Appling's long liner before it bumped the concrete a dozen feet above the ground.

West crashed against the wall and toppled to the turf, out of action. American League batterymen from the nearby bullpen were first to reach him. Then came some teammates and Doc Rohde, Cincinnati trainer, hurrying from the bench.

Far behind and trudging slowly and sorrowfully, stalked Stengel. His aspect reflected a dour mood as he marched across rightfield. At that moment the 32,273 beholders believed that dire misfortune had befallen the newly crowned king of the day. So evidently did Stengel.

Swinging Again

It turned out to be just a bruise and the Big Bee was in there swinging the next time the Hive horde took the field in a National League game. But through Casey Stengel's mind, as he trod sod en route for the spot marked X, there probably paraded panorama of West's courageous and colorful career, starting way back on a high school campus, reaching its apex a few minutes before at the roar of his game-winning homer, now perhaps shattered permanently by a broken ankle, twisted knee, or some other leg injury such as has wrecked many another star on other fields in other years.

Casey saw a gangling youngster with mighty bat-power scampering in the vestments of Alhambra High School out in California some half-dozen years ago, near Case's winter home in Glendale. Casey's baseball sense marked the kid as a possible future great. He cornered him after the game.

He learned that this Maxie West, born in Dexter, Mo., in Stoddard County, down in the southeastern corner of the State, an Alhambran since his folks moved to California when he was 4 years old, had college in mind. Max aimed to take a degree in physical ed at the University of California.

Joins Sacramento

A year later, Max joined Sacramento, of the Pacific Coast League, instead of becoming a Golden Bear at Berkeley. Casey was then Brooklyn manager. Bob Quinn was Brooklyn president. Casey urged the purchase of West, but before anything happened the Sacramento club went on the rocks, a bank seized the three best players—Max and two others—and held them for ransom over the winter.

A baseball firm known as the San Francisco Missions offered the bank so much money that in 1936, Max became a Mission. By spring of 1938 Stengel was Boston manager and Quinn was Boston president. Says Quinn to Stengel when they met at the National League meeting in February:

"Remember that kid out on the Coast? That West? Well, you've got him."

Then came a long series of scenes—Stengel, heroic homer-hitter for the Giants in the 1923 world series, teaching West how to level his war-club at big league pitching; Johnny Cooney, the master-outfielder, showing the eager but awkward youth how to play those far-flying drives toward the fences; then West making good with 19 home runs in 1939 to become the "Big Bee," the hero of the Hive, the star every other National League club yearned to capture.

West's 1939 season saw him burgeon to full stature as a star, for he hit at least one homer in every park in the National League—two of them in St. Louis on the same day, June 25, an augury of what was to happen a year and fortnight later.

He was an All-Star in the Tampa victory of the National League over the American League All Star team last March but he got to bat only late in the day. When the eight senior circuit managers chose him as a Boston representative for the July classic, Manager Bill McKechnie nominated him as starting rightfielder for the 1940 test of midseason strength between the two major leagues. Then the heroic homer. Now there he lies, out there on the grass!

Happy Ending

These highlights paraded in Stengel's fancy as he marched to the spot where West lay on the ground surrounded by friends and foes. But the story had a happy ending.

It turned out to be no broken ankle nor twisted knee. Just a hip-bruise. Soon West stood up and the thousands cheered him as loudly as when he hit his homer. By Saturday of All-Star game week he was swinging as lustily as ever.

Indians Break Jinx, Defeat Red Sox, 9-6

Keltner and Mack Pace Attack as Tribe Ends Six-Game Losing Streak; Cronin, Foxx and Doerr Blast Home Runs

By the Associated Press

Boston, July 20.—The Cleveland Indians snapped a six-game losing streak today by pounding out a 9-6 victory over the Boston Red Sox in a free-hitting melee marked by five home runs.

Ken Keltner and Ray Mack, who collected the brace of Cleveland circuit wallops, led the vicious Indian 13-hit attack with three hits each. Skipper Joe Cronin, Jimmy Foxx and Bobby Doerr each blasted a ball out of the park in the losing Sox cause.

Mel Harder pitched most of the distance for the Indians and, although hit hard, was effective in the clutches and several times cut short Boston threats with strike-outs or double-play balls.

Ancient Lefty Grove started for the Sox, but was tagged for four runs in the second with none out and left the game. Earl Johnson, a recent importation from Rocky Mount, succeeded him and flashed some fine pitching until the Indians got to him in the seventh to break a 4-4 tie with a three-run cluster.

who drove his Midget 35.377 miles an hour to better the old mark of 34.782 set by Bert Steacie at Red Bank in 1938.

Despite Chatfield's firm hold on the regatta's star role, Philadelphia's Louis Burk was possibly the most consistent if not the most colorful of the inboard winners.

Record Week Old

Burk's Senorita, a new class A racer, upset the mile record established only a week ago at Cambridge by Bill Kammerer, of Baltimore. Burk turned in a mark of 42.105 miles an hour.

In 5-mile competition, he established a speed of 39.029 miles an hour. There was no previous record listed for class A inboards.

Sarah Bonfoey, driving her husband's fast Tae Foy III, had little trouble clinching the ladies' inboard free-for-all, defeating Mrs. Andy Crawford, of Washington, in both heats. There were a number of women drivers entered in other events, notably the outboards, but the little Quincy, Ill., matron was the lone member of the sex to chalk up a victory.

Her husband, E. Monroe Bonfoey, won the E. G. H and J class races with comparative ease, his only real opposition coming from Nick Tuso, jr., of Vineland, N. J., whose Golden Star was good but not good enough.

After the last race was over and the regatta had virtually folded up for the night, the race committee scheduled additional time trials—chiefly for George Ward, jr., of Wilmington, Del., who was unable to get his E Class Hi Ho here in time for regular competition.

Upshot of the time trials—run over flat, smooth water—was two new world records and replacements of one established this morning.

Ehrhardt, running the measured mile in 43.902, took a short-lived record away from H. Barclay Stevenson, also of Philadelphia, whose D racer Babe did the mile this morning in 43.636.

Summaries:

He Did Captures Fleetwing Handicap at Empire City Track

Hanger's Charge Beats 10 Sprinters

Shows His Heels to Field in Whirlwind Finish; Pays $5.10

By the Associated Press

Empire City Race Track, Yonkers, N. Y., July 20.—Running the most spectacular race of his brilliant 1940 campaign, Arnold Hanger's He Did today showed why he is called king of the sprinters when he staged a whirlwind finish to win the tenty-seventh Fleetwing Handicap. Carrying 132 pounds and conceding plenty of weight to ten rivals, the Victorian veteran got up to take the $5,050 prize by a half length before a roasting crowd of 19,885.

C. V. Whitney's Parasang finished second but was disqualified. The place was awarded to G. D. Widener's Dr. Whinny, which trailed Parasang by two lengths. The show went to Mrs. D. A. Buckley's Here Goes, a "field" horse.

Unbeaten in five starts this year and also victorious in his last race of 1939, He Did gave favorite players their first success on today's card. The bounding bay paid $5.10. He ran the short 6 furlongs in 1:08 1-5.

Parasang was disqualified because, 40 yards from the finish, he was held responsible for interference to several horses. The Whitney colt ducked in, forcing Dr. Whinny over on Here Goes, which in turn bothered Arden Lass.

He Did, which recently won Aqueduct's Carter Handicap, had to be a lot of horse to triumph this afternoon. Eddie Arcaro broke him well but the game favorite was outrun by several horses to the last furlong. At that point, He Did seemed beaten, especially under such weight, but the Hanger horse revealed his class by putting on an amazing rally that swept him to victory in the last few strides. Parasang worked his way up and appeared headed for success after bothering the other leaders, but He Did was not to be denied. Here Goes and Dr. Whinny held on well after staging a duel for the pacemaking job.

The mutuels play for the first five races was $682,136.

Hillcrest Plays

Hillcrest A. C. will meet Fort DuPont A. C. in a double-header at Suitland Airport this afternoon, starting at 1 o'clock. Hillcrest players should report at 2715 Naylor road southeast, at noon.

$10,000 Stakes To Blue Pair, Sixth in Row

Star Juvenile Wins, 1:05 1-5, Equaling The Track Record

By the Associated Press

Boston, July 20.—Charles C. Van Meter's Blue Pair, a $600 yearling, made it six in a row and stamped himself as an outstanding juvenile today when he captured the $10,000 added Mayflower Stakes in a star-studded field of 2-year-olds.

Blue Pair overcame early interference, ran into more trouble at the three-eighth pole, but forged to the front under Maurice Berger's expert guidance to cover the 5 furlongs in 1:05 1-5, equaling the track record.

The winner had a three-quarter length advantage over Arnold Hanger's Big Stakes, which had been leading most of the way. H. Guy Bedwell's Blensign finished third, another length away, while Ben Lister's Bull Briar ran fourth.

Favored at 9-5 in the mutuels, Blue Pair paid $5.40, $3.80 and $3. Big Stakes returned $9.80 and $5, and the show price on Blensign was $3.40.

Eleven juveniles went to the post for the stake, which carried a net value of $12,600 to the winner. The victory was Blue Pair's seventh in ten starts.

Illinois Jockey Hurt In Three-Horse Pileup

Cleveland, July 20 (AP).—A three-horse spill during the fourth race at Thistledown track today sent Jockey Andy Bomar of East St. Louis, Ill., to a hospital with a fractured collar bone and hip injuries. Riders of the other mounts were shaken up but not badly hurt.

Bomar was riding Betnaber in the 6-furlong whirl and was thrown as the horse stumbled and fell. The other two mounts went down trying to avoid Betnaber.

Odd Star, at 9 to 2, won the race

By Anne Hagner

If there are any would-be "dark horses" with aspirations toward setting the horse show world on fire this season, they'd better start now or forget about the whole thing. When it comes to surprises, we aren't having many this summer, thank you.

Anne Hagner

A mid-July roundup of goings-on amongst the hay-burning set finds last year's champions still performing so brilliantly that they have almost overshadowed less established mounts.

There are a few interesting exceptions, though. One is Dr. Lewis M. Allen's Clifton's Lad, who has been shown pretty extensively during most of his eight years but, until recently, had never won a Virginia championship. He did take the Altoona (Pa.) title last year, but has fared much less successfully in his home State.

Hence, when the Lad came through at Culpeper with sufficient points to take the tricolor, many jaws sagged with surprise. As a real working hunter, the little gray gelding is known to be hard to beat, but his size has kept him from many major awards in the show ring.

Most judges prefer big, strapping horses for show purposes, but when Clifton's Lad won the Culpeper championship over Mrs. James Hamilton's Golondrina, it was a definite victory for the school that demands that its hunters be small enough to get out of tight spots a-hunting. Neither of Culpeper's titlists can beat the 16-hand mark on the measuring stick.

The only other surprise that has come to light thus far in the year is the difficulty that committees are having with the American Horse Shows Association scoring for championships and reserves. The business involves more than a simple matter in addition, because in most cases the trouble has been in the wording of the prize list.

Walter Craigie, who does a weekly piece on horses for a Richmond paper, has ferretted out several cases recently where reserve awards have gone to the wrong horse, through a misinterpretation of which classes count full value and which half in the point-scoring.

Loud screams on the subject have come from all sides, and Walter's most familiar pose at shows these days is with fists up, ready to go into immediate action. To those who claim that the rule-book is being granted too much importance, Walter answers that as long as some form of authority is necessary, it should be obeyed in full.

His suggestion is, that prize lists be sent to the horse show association for approval so that such details may be cheked on before individual shows get in a muddle on the score sheets.

Hair-tearing on the subject is not confined to Virginia, either. From the Ox Ridge show, in the far reaches of Connecticut, comes word that final adding-up gave the hunter reserve to Blanche Clarke's good model horse, Lord Britain, in place of Frederick M. Warburg's Battle Day, who was originally awarded the ribbon at the show.

What with one thing and another turning up about rule book trouble, it looks as if exhibitors would do well to follow the advice given Peggy Keith Hamilton by a horseman at Culpeper: Carry the red leather-bound volume on a short chain, attached to the belt, so that it may be referred to in the heat of battle.

It might get in the way while the wearer rides in the show, but no doubt it would be a far more attractive addition to Corinthian apparel than the contents of a certain sandwich case we know. The owner, anxious to stick by the regulation that cases and flasks must be filled with food and drink, put a ham sandwich in his at the Washington show and doesn't expect to take it out until after the Columbus event the second week in September!

Rail chips: Man the life-boats—the Leny Manor Horse Show comes off next Saturday . . . the committee is having fun capitalizing on the deluge of last year . . . advertisements read: "After the flood of 1939, who could forget the Leny Manor Horse Show?" . . . Dickie Kelley is judging . . . why can't horse shows attract crowds such as tie up traffic in Potomac Park Sunday afternoons to watch the polo games? . . . it's a cinch that only a small percentage understand what goes on, but the yells of excitement are enough to scare away all the ducks that live across the river . . . what would be a tremendous asset, though, is an amplifying system to keep the onlookers posted . . . no game there today; the Third Cavalry plays at Harrisburg.

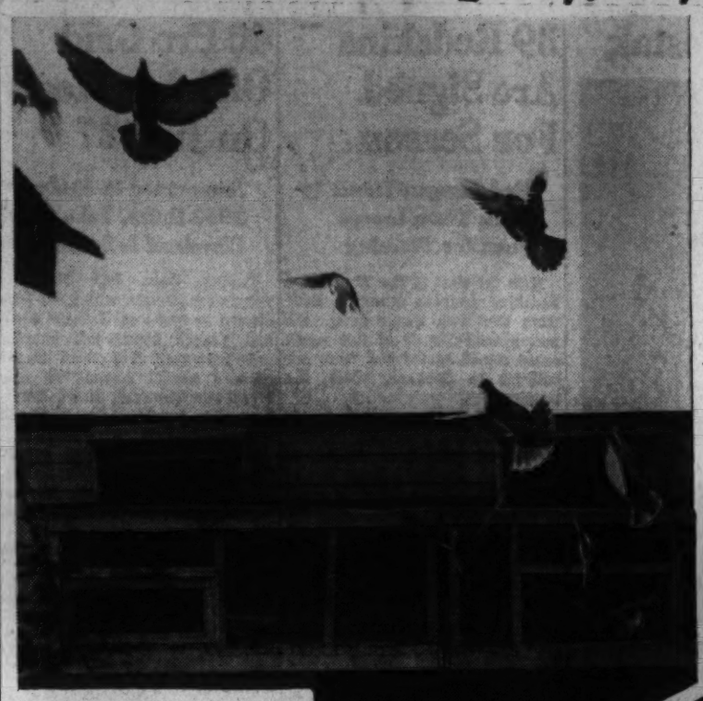
Those Harmless Homing Pigeons Are Ready For National Emergency, Says Fancier



Left—Some of the 40 youngsters in Harry C. Burke's loft take off for an evening "road-work" session for the coming "young bird" racing season from the loft at 2335 Thirty-third street southeast. Below—Burke, one of the District's foremost racing pigeon experts, examines the wing structure of one of his young birds which will take an active part in the season beginning the first week in September.

Young Bird Racing Season Will Put Speedsters in Shape

By Al Hailey

Spokesmen for Washington's "pigeon reserve corps" still were unable to say yesterday just what it is that makes a homing pigeon come home, but they were emphatic about one point: pigeon men of America are prepared for any national emergency that may arise as a result of Europe's war.

A survey conducted along the pigeon front, now in the midst of preparations for the advent of the "young bird" racing season, disclosed this fact yesterday.

Harry C. Burke, former president of the International Federation of American Homing Pigeons Union, estimates that when the season is over there'll be more than a thousand new birds from the Chesapeake Center alone ready to fly in the service of the U. S. Army's Signal Corps, if need arises.

A Veteran Bird Racer

Burke has been racing pigeons since 1905, and for the past ten years has had as his partner in the homing pigeon hobby Representative P. G. Holmes, of Massachusetts.

Burke's racing teams will be selected from his loft of 40 "young birds," meaning pigeons born since January 1, 1940, and the entire crew is now undergoing a strenuous training session in preparation for their instruction period.

This year the "young bird" season has a splendid significance, as Burke explains it.

"The present day 'blitzkrieg' action led us to believe for a time that carrier pigeons would be used less extensively than in the last World War, but we have been informed that they probably are even more valuable today," Burke explained.

Full Cooperation Pledged

Within 24 hours of a national emergency, pigeon fanciers of the Nation are now prepared to ship 4,800 finely trained homing birds to specified centers in the various corps areas of the United States.

"The national convention of the federation pledged its full cooperation with the War Department, and the Signal Corps has given the pigeon clubs every possible aid," Burke explained.

"One of the main reasons for the current young bird season is to build up the sport so that in event of a Government emergency we will have birds properly trained to carry messages," he added.

Under the present setup in the War Department, allowances have been made for such an occurrence, and men have been specified for the selection of birds for service. In the World War the rounding-up of homing pigeons witnessed several occurrences in which alleged "exorbitant" sums were paid private owners for champion birds. It is understood that a standard price for the feathery speedsters will be set in event of a future emergency, and that owners will accept the terms.

First Race in September

The young bird season will get under way over the Northwest racing course the first Sunday in September with a 100-mile airline flight from Cumberland, Md.

Burke's loft will get the first taste of "road work" in the next two weeks. Burke will start off with the youngsters by taking them to the Capitol and letting them fly to their home lofts at 2335 Thirty-third street southeast for the first hop. Next liberation point will be at the Washington Monument, and Burke will gradually work his way toward Cumberland until the birds have learned to negotiate long distances successfully.

As for what enables them to find their way, Burke, like all other pigeon men, is uncertain. It's a certain unerring instinct—Burke calls it "sight"—that shows them the way. At any rate, the homing pigeon groups in the Chesapeake center—comprised by racing clubs in the District, Maryland and Virginia—are going right ahead with preparations for the "young bird" season with the determination that their racers will be ready to meet any emergency that may arise.

If summer heat makes you antiathletic, local hikers can show you how to get needed exercises without engaging in strenous outdoor sports. Not that walking 5 or 10 miles is as easy as swinging in a hammock; but some days we'd rather walk several hours than dance around a blazing tennis court for one.

Capital Hiking Club, Wanderbirds and National Capital Parks are in the midst of schedules which last well into the fall and which offer as much fun to bachelor girls as to those who like to go with their families or friends. Generally speaking you bring your own lunch and water. Schedules are posted in the Public Library.

Wanderbirds' ages range from 18 to 80, and their hiking activities include photography, swimming, canoeing as well as auxiliary outings to skate and cycle. Two trips are in order today: One to Maryland's Eastern Shore for a hike and swim with leaders meeting their followers in front of the National Theater at 8 a. m.; another hike and swim beginning at the end of the Cabin John carline, 10 a. m. Next Sunday a similar outing to Chopowamsic Park, Va., will be held, with the group meeting in front of the National at 9 a. m.

Capital Hikers' Sunday tours often touch historic landmarks. Today's trip is to Chancellorsville National Battlefield Park. Next week the group will hike and swim along the Patuxent River. Both trips originate at 1916 F street northwest. Moonlight hikes on week nights are also held.

Outings of the Naturalist Division, National Capital Parks, offer Wednesday morning trips for juniors and Sunday outings for the whole family. Private cars and buses meet this morning at 11 at the Maryland end of the Potomac River Bridge beyond Paw Paw, West Va., to tour the C. & O. Parkway tunnel.

Louise Shutz Kjellstrom, motion picture committee chairman of the National Section on Women's Athletics, has returned from teaching at Ohio U.'s summer sports session where she conferred with Helen Driver, University of Buffalo instructor whose book, "Tennis for Teachers," and experience teaching tennis here and in Sweden make her an expert on the subject. They decided that plans for a teaching film should include the new women's overhead and single volley strokes as well as regulation forehand, backhand and service.

Dogs . . .

By George Berner

We have always felt that prescribing for sick or ailing dogs was not a part of our job, and we have always referred the writers of queries concerning sick dogs to their veterinarians. We realize, though, that there are many times when a dog may injure himself slightly or for some other reason be in need of first aid. Perhaps something should be done until the vet can be reached or again it may be some trivial thing that, while needing attention, does not require the services of the professional man.

BERNER

We have been informed, sometimes sarcastically, by readers that in an emergency, we were absolutely a total loss in that the dog would undoubtedly be dead by the time they wrote us and received an answer. This is, of course, quite true so let's look at some emergencies now.

Many dogs are poisoned every year, some deliberately and some accidentally, but the result is always the same unless something is done very promptly. If you have any idea that your dog has been poisoned, don't take him to the vet unless the doctor is within ten minutes of you. If he is farther than that, have somebody else call him and you get to work on the dog immediately. Give him an emetic, a pinch of salt on the back of his tongue, whites of several eggs or anything else you may know of which will make him vomit quickly. We always use salt water and plenty of it, pouring it in the dog until he can hold no more and then repeating. By the time you have accomplished this, your vet should be there, if you have told him that it was a poison case.

Some dogs seem to have an idea that their stomachs are first cousins to open hearth furnaces and will swallow nails or other pieces of metal, pieces of rubber and many other objects which are entirely foreign. If you see your dog swallow a foreign object of some sort, feed him all the bread he will eat and then, after a few minutes, give him something which will cause him to regugitate (good word). If you don't see it, try the treatment again. Watch him, and if he develops diarrhea or his stomach becomes swollen, call your vet at once.

Cuts usually take care of themselves unless severe enough to require stitches. Minor cuts should be treated with peroxide of hydrogen and dusted with boric acid powder or B. F. I. powder. Cuts need not be bandaged unless they are very large or deep and then a vet should see them.

Contrary to general belief, dogs do suffer from sunstroke or heat prostration often. In these cases, cold water or ice should be applied to the head and body, and a sniff of amonia will help. Make it just a sniff now as it is very powerful stuff.

Tail injuries are very common, among large short-haired dogs, especially, and they are usually very near the tip. We make a mixture of vaseline and B. F. I. powder, making a very thick paste, spread it well on and around the injury and bandage it 6 or 8 inches up the tail. Care should be taken that the bandage is not tight enough to stop the circulation. To keep it on, wind adhesive tape around its entire length.

Ear canker can make a dog's life awfully miserable and while some cases need the vet's care, there are others that don't. If your dog suddenly starts shaking his head vigorously, shows signs of tenderness in one or both ears or paws at his hears, look in his ears, and if you see what look like small dark scabs, he's in trouble. A little sweet oil applied to the spots several times daily will often help, but we pick off the scabs with a wooden probe and then touch the spots with a piece of cotton soaked in alcohol. Care must be used here so that the alcohol doesn't run down in his ear.

Well, that's about all we have room for if we are going to get the queries in. If you have any other minor doggy ailments you want explained, write us, and we'll explain them in the column for everybody's benefit (we hope).

The Old Dominion Kennel Club journeyed afar for their July meeting, and the fact that they went to the home of Mrs. Earl C. Kline at Chapel Point, Md., probably accounts for the fact that there were more members present than there have been for many a meeting. Every year the club is invited to the Kline home, and once there, it is something never to be missed.

Wonder what happened to the movement to increase the tax on the fairer sex of dogdom in the District. Probably stirred up so much indignation that it became rather a hot potato.

Dog Queries

Q. I have a cocker spaniel which is going to have puppies in a few days. I naturally intended to have the puppies' tails cut, but a friend tells me this is very cruel. Is this true and should I leave their tails natural?

A. Cut the puppies' tails by all means. Wouldn't a cocker be a funny looking thing with a long tail. If properly done when the puppies are about three days old there is very little if any pain, certainly no cruelty.

Q. Some time ago you said in your column that dogs should not be clipped. Does this mean the same as pluck? I always have my wire-haired terrier plucked.

A. No, and we're glad you brought that up. By clipping we mean the actual clipping of the hair, right down or nearly down to the skin. Wirehaired terriers should be plucked whenever they need it, winter or summer. They look like mendescript poodles otherwise.

Q. Is it possible to get false teeth made for dogs? I have a very old dog that has lost all his teeth but is otherwise in perfect health.

A. It probably could be arranged, but if they gave him half as much trouble as our three-tooth bridge gives us, we'd suggest you let him get along on soft foods without the store-bought teeth.

Q. To settle an argument will you publish in your column which you think is the easiest dog to train, the male or the female?

A. The female.

About Boats

By Marshall Andrews

With aviation, yachting shares the dubious distinction of having been benefited by the last passage at arms in which this country was involved and, like aviation, must occasionally look at that benefit askance.

When World War I broke out, flying was a thing of box kites, "quick start records," ballyhoo and barnstorming which no one took seriously. The war lifted it from the circus category, forced it to develop fast, dependable, long range airplanes, from which today's airliners claim descent.

ANDREWS

Yachting, likewise, was a sport for the wealthy before the war. There were dabblers in yachting, of course, fellows who put-putted about in powered skiffs and yearned for the sleek cruisers which whisked by them aloofly from time to time. The war changed all that.

So greatly did the Nation overbuild in Navy and Coast Guard craft, in merchant vessels and merchant vessel lifeboats that hundreds of more or less seaworthy boats were dumped on the market in the early months of the last decade. It was not an unmixed blessing.

To this day the Potomac and other yachtable rivers swarm with castoff lifeboats, remade into cruisers with sometimes terrible ingenuity. How seaworthy these may be depends, of course, upon the design of their superstructure, their power installation, their ballast and the care their steel hulls have had. Some of them are very fine boats for limited cruising and some have ventured into (and miraculously returned from) much heartier waters than the upper Potomac.

Despite the ministrations of amateur boatbuilders with more enthusiasm sometimes than skill, these old lifeboats have done yachting a measurable service.

Many a chap who never would have scraped together enough funds to buy or build a real pleasure cruiser has bought one of these for a few dollars, fitted it out for a few dollars more and joined the ranks of yachtsmen. As the infection set in and grew with time and possession and financial conditions improved, these lifeboat cruisers were handed down to newer accretions to the yachting ranks and their owners graduated into larger and more imposing craft.

Thus the first World War must be credited with adding yachtsmen to the sport of yachting by furnishing them with the means to yacht. Once bitten by the bug, they have steadily improved their status and, moving on, have made way for others who in turn grew up into bigger and better boats.

Prohibition too, for all its depraving influences otherwise, contributed not a little to yachting. In the race with rum runners to provide faster and faster boats, the Coast Guard threw on the market many fine, seaworthy craft, from picket boats to patrol boats. You see these in service today under the yacht ensign, skippered by owners who have attained their ultimate in boats.

Maybe the current brawl overseas will lend a second fillip to yachting in this country. And maybe, by the time it's over, yachting will be a dead thing because, by Government fiat, no one will be permitted to own a yacht or even a tin lifeboat.

Twelfth annual Chester River Regatta, featured by races for sail and power, will get under way next Friday at Chestertown, Md., under auspices of the Chester River Yacht and Country Club. Events will occupy two full days, ending Saturday night with a dance at the clubhouse.

Tee to Green

By Merrell Whittlesey

Pardon this department for misinforming Washington's golf public for some time but according to a timely eight-page bulletin of the United States Golf Association a bogey is not a bogey, there is no such thing as a twosome, a threesome is not a threesome likewise for a foursome, and medal play is not medal play.

WHITTLESEY

All this comes under the heading of "Correct Usage of Golf Terms," edited by Richard S. Francis, the recognized authority on the rule book.

This is all rather confusing as golf terms are all rather technical to all but the regular golfer or the tournament players. In our book, a bogey was a one over par hole, most people recognized it as such and there was no argument. But according to Francis, a bogey is a "score which a fair player should make on a given hole and so for a whole course; it parallels par." The leaflet suggests coining a word for one over par. We've heard it called many things, most of which are unprintable.

In regards to a twosome, well there's just no such thing. If one man plays another it's a single, and if two players compete together in "stroke" play, it's a double. A threesome is a very rare match, too complicated to explain. It's best to say three golfers together is a three-ball match and three playing stroke competition is just "three."

The correct usage of foursome is two players playing alternate strokes with one ball against two others, Scotch foursomes and California Scotch foursomes add to the complications.

Best ball and aggregate are outlawed terms, in addition to "best ball and worst ball matches." Medal play is unheard of, it should be called stroke play.

However, after going over the whys and wherefores as to the correct usage of the various terms, we like the good old days. Bogeys, foursomes, medal play, threesomes, etc. If the U. S. G. A. hasn't coined a word for over-par in its 46 years of its existence, it's about time it takes a little action. It would be the most-used word in golf, as 75 per cent of the niblick-nudgers go over par more often than they equal or better it. Had your bogey today.

Buck Worsham's rather sudden but nevertheless anticipated leap into the front ranks of the District's better playing golf professionals, where he has reached the playing ability of his older brother, Lewis, and passed a lot of others, brings to mind the thought that the Chevy Chase assistant and Lew, the Burning Tree professional, are about the most formidable brother duo to play around here in years.

The young professionals would be hard to beat if paired together and would have an edge over other brother golfers in this vicinity. Usually when there is one fairly good golfer in the family the other likes the game but hardly takes it serious. For instance Roger Peacock, who's been playing in the 60's and 70's since he was putter-high while brother Dick has played the game merely as a pastime. When Maury Nee was playing tournament golf, brother Dermot was an admirer but just a week-end golfer. Such was the case with Harry Pitt when he was winning Invitation and sectional tournaments by the dozen. His brother, Thomas S. Pitt, played tournament golf but more for a good time than any championship thoughts.

Bobby Brownell, who incidentally played Manor in 71 last week, hobbling along on his putter, plays the serious golf in the Brownell family, while brother Jim plays when there is nothing else to do. Al Houghton, four-time Maryland and three-time Bedford Open champ, has carried the name into the top pro ranks while younger brother Billy quit the pro ranks and is now a good club champion. The Oliveri family pulls hard for Andy, but Dr. Michael Oliveri preferred a D. D. S. to championship aspirations.

Allan and Danny Burton form a tough professional brother combination while a year ago or two ago Walter and Frank Cunningham would have given the Worshams a good match. Raymond and Gilbert Willett and now Carroll and others could make a golfing family out of the Willetts, but Gilbert has all but forsaken the game.

Cliff Spencer and brother Glenn would more than likely win a brother "siege gun" contest as they are two of the longest driving pros, although Glenn is now just a once-a-week golfer. Mel Shorey and brother John, when the latter was just about the best amateur in town, could have whacked a lot of good brother teams, while the Stevens brothers, Eddie and Claggett, wouldn't ask for ups from any tandem. Billy Dettweiler's younger brother Jack prefers rifle and other sports with just an occasional round of golf, but they wouldn't be a pushover. This could go on for five hours, taking father-and-son combinations, such as Albert and Roland MacKenzie, or brother and sister, Helen and Billy Dettweiler, mother and son, Mrs. Brownell and Bobby, and so far into the night.

On Fishing

Many fresh-water fishermen are prejudiced against lures which make a splash or fuss on the water, believing the fuss on the surface will scare the fish. If they would lay aside these notions long enough to try out some timely tips from an old-timer and follow suggestions for the use of popping and chugging lures the revelation will be little short of amazing. It applies equally to large and small mouth bass as well as other species of top-striking fresh-water fishes.

ACKERMAN

Many salt-water fish that feed at or near the surface are suckers for popping and chugging baits, and, like bass, may be teased by repeated casts, plus proper lure manipulation, until they seemingly lose patience and strike as much out of pugnacity as out of the desire for food. They may even be brought up from deep water to strike at surface plugs, and at most all times of the year.

Chugging is particularly effective in open pockets, over thick weed beds and where the average lure would dive into the weeds and foul. The longer a chugger is in the water, the more apt it is to catch a fish.

Good chugging lures are those with notched or cupped heads. The "chugger-spook" was designed particularly for the one purpose, but equally effective are lures like the "basser," "zig-zag" and "lucky 13." The proper manipulation of these lures make them dive under—and the cup, in doing so, catches a quantity of air and releases it under water, making a big bubble and causing surface commotion. The same chugging methods may be applied to flyrods with lures such as the "bubble bug" and "popper spook."

Some casters, and they are successful, too, in using popping lures literally make the water boil with repeated pops.

Strikes on popping lures are amazingly quick and strong, and the fish large. The fish approaches the lure, watches its action until it is moving off and then hits it hard. Best results are obtained with a floating line. As with most floating lures, poppers operate best without wire leaders, but impossible with such fish as salt-water trout because of their sharp teeth.

The oddity of popping, and the reason for so naming this type of fishing, is the sound—a distinct "plop" easily heard by the angler, and sensed by the fish through the vibration in the water.

To pop successfully, allow the lure to lie still for several seconds, then take up the slack line with the reel. With rod pointed well toward the lure give a short, snappy jerk—not just a pull, moving the tip of the rod about 2 feet. The snappier the jerk, the quicker the action of the lure, the deeper the dive and the larger the bubble. The slack is again taken up and the operation repeated until the lure is retreived.

McCosky Takes American Bat Lead; Danning Tops National

Tiger Star Is Slugging At .355 Pace

Cecil Travis Holds Sixth Place With .345 Mark; Radcliff In Second Place

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 20.—William Barney McCosky, Detroit's 22-year-old sophomore outfielder, was ignored on the All-Star selections a few weeks ago, but he's the big offensive noise in the American League anyway.

Young Barney collected 18 hits in 35 trips to the plate last week to take over the batting lead and move into the front-running spot in three other individual departments of play.

McCosky gained seven points through Friday's games, boosting his mace mark to .3553, a slight lead over Rip Radcliff, of St. Louis, who is hitting .3550. The Tiger star also tops the field in triples with 12 and he has the most hits, 113, and the most runs, 70.

Travis Is Sixth

Two former leaders in hitting, Taft Wright, of Chicago, and Lou Finney, of Boston, are tied for third at .354, representing a one-point loss for Finney during the week and a two-point drop for Wright, the pace-setter a week ago.

Luke Appling, Chicago shortstop, who trailed Wright last week by a fraction of a point, fell 10 points to .346, good for fifth spot. Behind him are Cecil Travis, Washington, .345; Frank Hayes, Philadelphia, .345; Ted Williams, Boston, .335; Hank Greenberg, Detroit, .325, and Joe DiMaggio, New York, .325.

This week marks DiMaggio's first appearance among the first ten batters, and indicates the Yankee slugger may be ready to make a bid for his second straight batting title after a slow start.

Greenberg leads in doubles and runs batted in, having 31 two-ply blows and 29 runs accounted for. Jimmy Foxx, Boston, remained tops among the home-run hitters with 20 and George Case, of Washington, retained the stolen bases leadership with 16.

Buck Newsom, of Detroit, hung up his thirteenth straight mound victory before suffering a broken thumb to hold the won-lost lead with 13 wins and 1 loss. Bob Feller, Cleveland, ran his strike-out total to 161, easily the best in the circuit.

Display Home Can Be Had At Low Cost

House in Ideal Location Offers Gracious Living

By Martha Ellyn

The trim brick house, known as The Post Display Home, located at 3104 Lyndale place southeast and presented by J. Wesley Buchanan, is a shining example of a moderately priced home that deserves the name of Budget House. If you have a little more than $1 a day to be spent for housing and you want to possess your own home, this model home is one you will want to investigate thoroughly.

With a background of lovely Fort Dupont Park, which is a section heavily wooded and bordering a brook, and nearby tracts—Anacostia Parkway, Kenilworth Water Lily Gardens, National Arboretum, there is little to be desired as to surrounding atmosphere.

The builders, and the Palais Royal as interior decorator, have done a worthwhile job in developing the interior of this model home, too. Its general lines suggest Colonial architecture, and the inside atmosphere gives one the feeling of genuine hominess.

Red Accents Kitchen

The pleasant living room with its light gray paper, white woodwork and wrought-iron staircase, decorated in black and ivory, has been attractively furnished. The dining room follows the general color scheme of the living room with grey walls and white woodwork.

Red is the accent color in the kitchen that is made exceedingly light with its buff-colored walls.

Down in the spacious rumpus room is a pleasant surprise, for it is a veritable second living room. The first thing one notices is how delightfully cool it is. Blue matting rugs, with gay red curtains at the three windows and one door, give it an exotic note. Comfortable reed furniture, upholstered in red, blue and Roman striped material, dispels anything like monotony.

Even the gas heater looks like a part of the decorations. It is a lovely shade of green with black and chromium trim. There is laundry equipment cunningly concealed in its own individual corner, and close by a door where one can conveniently go out to hang the washing.

Have Cross-Ventilation

The two bedrooms upstairs have cross-ventilation and plenty of light. The larger bedroom across the front of the house, is intriguing with its delft blue background and white motif. This basic color will take almost any color of decoration. There are three windows hung with white chintz sprinkled with gay floral design.

The second bedroom which is slightly smaller in dimensions is a sunshine room with its paper of yellow background decorated with white diamond pattern. It is the type of room in which you want to hang white ruffled curtains and use maple furniture. This the decorator, Miss G. M. Park, has done with pleasing effect.

There is a generous linen closet in the upstairs hall. A light cream wall is employed on the upper wall of the glistening bathroom. A black and white tile border accentuates the wall treatment. And a black and white tile floor and blue window curtains give further life to the bathroom.

An admirable architectural scheme has been used in planning this excellently proportioned budget house.

Week's Permits Here Set Peak Of $2,372,900

Office Structure To Cost $1,500,000 Is Contemplated

Issuance last week by District Building Inspector John W. Oehmann's office of a permit for erection of a $1,500,000 office structure brought valuation of private building and repair work in Washington to $2,372,900, a week's high record for the current year.

Last week's figure marked an advance from $861,870, total of the preceding six-days period. During the past week, the building inspector's office approved permits providing for construction of 97 single-family dwellings and six apartment projects.

Permits issued by the office recently included these:

Home Mortgage Costs At New Low, Board Survey Shows

Home mortgage costs at new lows, show uniformity over the country and the market for homesites is improving. This remarkable degree of standardization shown in the thirty-fifth semiannual survey of the real estate market, by the National Association of Real Estate Boards, findings of which in respect to mortgage costs, demand-supply situation, building activity, and subdivision market are released. The survey found:

An undersupply of one-family dwellings exists in 47 per cent of the cities, while only 4 per cent have an oversupply. Condition remains about the same as it was six months ago, when 45 per cent showed undersupply. The smallest cities are the ones most frequently reporting shortage. The largest cities begin to report oversupply. Business-property demand exceeds supply in only 11 per cent of the cities and supply is in excess of demand in 25 per cent. Six months ago the figures were respectively 12 per cent and 24 per cent.

Home-mortgage costs are again lowest in history. Commonest interest rate for loans on new homes is 5 per cent. The 4½ per cent rate is dominant in only 22 per cent of the reporting cities, but six months ago it led in only 18 per cent of the cities. Decided feeling is shown that preference given to new homes in FHA financing has tended to depress prices for older properties.

The biggest cities have awakened their subdivision market. Seventy per cent of them have more movement now than a year ago in this field. Homesite buying is livelier than last year in 54 per cent of all the cities, receded in only 8 per cent. Home building in the reporting cities over the past six months is

Homes Begun Under FHA Set Record

4,483 New Houses Started in Second Week of July

There were more new homes started under Federal Housing Administration inspection in the week ended July 13 than in any similar period in that agency's history, Administrator Stewart McDonald announced yesterday. At the same time, applications for mortgage insurance covering new homes to be built under FHA inspection continued at levels far ahead of the comparable 1939 period.

During the second week in July, FHA-inspected construction began on 4,253 new homes which are being financed with loans insured under Title II of the National Housing Act. In addition, there were 230 homes started which are being financed with loans insured under Title I of the act.

There was a gain of 48 per cent over the 2,870 Title II homes started in the same week of 1939; no comparable figure is available for the number of Title I homes started for the same period, since FHA inspection was not then required. The 4,253 figure exceeded the previous

Tiger Star Is Slugging At .355 Pace

Cecil Travis Holds Sixth Place With .345 Mark; Radcliff In Second Place

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 20.—William Barney McCosky, Detroit's 22-year-old sophomore outfielder, was ignored on the All-Star selections a few weeks ago, but he's the big offensive noise in the American League anyway.

Young Barney collected 18 hits in 35 trips to the plate last week to take over the batting lead and move into the front-running spot in three other individual departments of play.

McCosky gained seven points through Friday's games, boosting his mace mark to .3553, a slight lead over Rip Radcliff, of St. Louis, who is hitting .3550. The Tiger star also tops the field in triples with 12 and he has the most hits, 113, and the most runs, 70.

Travis Is Sixth

Two former leaders in hitting, Taft Wright, of Chicago, and Lou Finney, of Boston, are tied for third at .354, representing a one-point loss for Finney during the week and a two-point drop for Wright, the pace-setter a week ago.

Luke Appling, Chicago shortstop, who trailed Wright last week by a fraction of a point, fell 10 points to .346, good for fifth spot. Behind him are Cecil Travis, Washington, .345; Frank Hayes, Philadelphia, .345; Ted Williams, Boston, .335; Hank Greenberg, Detroit, .325, and Joe DiMaggio, New York, .325.

This week marks DiMaggio's first appearance among the first ten batters, and indicates the Yankee slugger may be ready to make a bid for his second straight batting title after a slow start.

Greenberg leads in doubles and runs batted in, having 31 two-ply blows and 29 runs accounted for. Jimmy Foxx, Boston, remained tops among the home-run hitters with 20 and George Case, of Washington, retained the stolen bases leadership with 16.

Buck Newsom, of Detroit, hung up his thirteenth straight mound victory before suffering a broken thumb to hold the won-lost lead with 13 wins and 1 loss. Bob Feller, Cleveland, ran his strike-out total to 161, easily the best in the circuit.

For him a 79.7 margin of victory and a round of boos

JAMES A. FARLEY

He didn't take a walk nor did he talk about November

Roosevelt Nodded, Hopkins Got Busy, And Farley Wilted

By Robert C. Albright

Chicago, July 20.—Lean, long, saturnine Harry L. Hopkins, who everybody made the mistake of thinking a sick man, turned the trick.

Graying, broad-shouldered, genial Jim Farley, political maestro of the first Chicago and the last Philadelphia Democratic convention, didn't have a chance from the start. He knew it, and made his plans accordingly.

One man was giving orders at the Democratic convention, the President. He was giving them by phone to Room 308 of the Blackstone Hotel, the "smoke-filled room" of Chicago. And one man, with a very efficient staff, was liaison. He was Hopkins.

Now it can be told why Farley "sometimes wondered" who was running the convention. He never had a doubt. He knew he wasn't.

The third term nomination is no longer a drawing room puzzler. It is a fait accompli.

Now it can be told why the President delayed announcement of his decision to run and why he sprung it with that keen sense of timing on Tuesday night, earlier than planned.

It can be told how and why Secretary of Agriculture Wallace was picked by the President for his running mate, how and why Wallace received only a 79.7 margin of victory, how and why the delegates booed.

But it can not be told what the people, whom the President said alone have the power to "draft," will do about it all in November. For before Chicago there was Philadelphia. At Philadelphia, Republicans chose one Wendell L. Willkie, an appealing, simple, direct fellow who considers the President's acceptance speech "very, very interesting." Republicans teamed with Willkie one Charles L. McNary, Senate minority leader, a potent and liberal Northwest farm figure.

They held an "unbossed" convention in striking contrast to this spiritless Chicago one-man show. This contrast was the principal topic of conversation among neutral observers here until things started happening Wednesday, Thursday and early Friday to remove all time for idle talk.

Joe Voter Will Have the Final Word

They say Chicago "made history." The "historic" nature of the work they were doing was the one compensation to Democratic delegates during those dull first days when they sulked.

Some of them obviously lacked an historic sense. Certainly never was history more reluctantly made.

Whether these Democratic doings, unprecedented as they were, will go down in the textbooks as vital stuff, depends on a more eminent American historian, Joe Voter. He hasn't written the final chapter. He no longer writes with the same sweeping stroke he has used. He is a fickle historian, with a vast capacity for change.

And right now he is in doubt, if big even money waged in Chicago on the night the President accepted is a gauge. By November, he ought to see things a little clearer, even if "the champ" doesn't take to the stump to meet the challenging Willkie. By November, the war will be nearer or farther from American shores. And long before November, the voting historian will have an opportunity to seriously weigh this first real prospect of a third term in 150 years of American political history.

But about this convention, so appropriately climaxed on Friday noon by Farley's announcement of withdrawal from national politics. The story of the convention was Farley just as the story of the convention was Roosevelt and the third term. The fight over the nomination of Wallace was but a consequence.

It was Roosevelt, who sent Secretary of Commerce Hopkins to Chicago to steer the third term parade of pledged delegates around the Postmaster General. And it was Farley who brought to the convention that Virginia firebrand of conservative democracy Carter Glass to dramatize with still effective tongue but failing voice all of the underlying Democratic opposition to a third term.

It was Roosevelt through Hopkins to Senator Barkley, who gave out the first definite sign that he would run. But it was Farley, through a newsless week of preconvention press conferences who provided the tip-off to the "secret" could reporters but have seen.

Convention Run by Remote Control

It was Roosevelt, who picked Wallace, passed the name on to Hopkins and by remote control forced his name to the top of that dog-fighting heap of Vice Presidential candidates. But it was Farley's third term resistance and first ballot race against his own chief that gave heart to that eleventh hour resurgence of delegates that threatened and nearly upset the President's controls.

Finally, it was the President after frequently indicating his desire to retire after two terms, who agreed to stay on. It was Farley, his one-time political drummer, who determined to retire.

Ironically, it was the palace guard inner circle clique, whose interference in politics Farley had so long resented, who completely took over in Chicago and stage-managed all that was done.

Hopkins had able assistance. In Senator Byrnes, of South Carolina, who floor-directed the third term and Wallace battles, he had an adept and experienced legislator. Byrnes has handled adroitly many a parallel situation for the President in Congress. In Senator Wagner, of New York, in charge of platform, the President had a tried-in-the-crucible liberal Democrat. Wagner had successfully managed New Deal labor battles in the Senate and brought back from Philadelphia in 1936 the platform the President wanted.

Middle-of-the-road strategists believe Mr. Roosevelt's third term convention might have clicked through with less static had the President placed more Chicago reliance on these two men.

The presence of Hopkins, in a hotel across the street at the controls, annoyed Farley, the old party leaders, some dissenting liberals and all conservative legislators present. Some of these were in the dark about what was going on, while such men as Hopkins, Frank Walker, favored as Farley's successor; Attorney General Jackson, Solicitor General Biddle and Assistant Attorney General Johnson were obviously "in the know." In the end it was the growing discontent of the delegates themselves, depressed by their very lack of information, which forced the President's hand on disclosing his willingness.

A last minute appendix to Barkley's speech was hastily drafted in that now famous "Room 308" on Tuesday. Before dusk the news had swept across the town, and never was Chicago Stadium packed tighter than Tuesday night when all streaked to the convention hall to hear.

The overwhelming landslide of renominating votes that followed was an anti-climax. Delegates were relieved and glad to get it over with. None had questioned that the President could have the nomination if he wanted it.

Roosevelt's Opposition Expected Defeat

The four-way contest, if you could call it that, was purely for the record. Neither Farley, Garner nor Tydings entertained the remotest hope for themselves. They had hoped that a show of resistance might persuade the President to retire. Few had expected Wheeler to stick.

The President's supreme test of this convention came not on Wednesday night's third term balloting but on Thursday night's Vice Presidential run-off. The name of Wallace, never previously considered a serious contender, started filtering seriously out of Hopkins' suite only 48 hours earlier.

Wallace was "tapped" for many reasons. The President wanted as liberal a candidate as he could get by the convention. He wanted a Westerner and a farm leader to meet Senate Minority Leader McNary on his own ground. Southern geographical considerations barred Byrnes, to the right of Wallace. Conservative balking barred Supreme Court Justice Douglas, to his left. So the word went out it was Wallace.

A groundswell of convention opposition followed, rumbling first from the Michigan boulevard hotel rooms and lobbies and exploding at last at Chicago Stadium. It stemmed from the camps of opposing candidates, who actually had planned for an open race. It thundered from the ranks of old party regulars who find it hard to forget that Wallace changed his Republican registration to Democratic only four years ago. And it swelled from the South, which saw Dixie's Garner displaced from the ticket without another Southern gentleman to take his place.

By the time delegates assembled for the run-off, the rebellion had reached such proportions that the President held up his acceptance speech on the outcome.

Byrnes, his floor manager, spread the word that the President himself would reject the nomination should the convention turn thumbs down on Wallace. Dutifully, high Administration figures, who had sought the prize for themselves, withdrew from the race. As one by one they stepped up to the platform to renounce it, their refrain was the same. Federal Security Administrator McNutt summed it up when he said that the President was his "Commander in Chief" and he would abide by his choice.

Protesting, shrieking McNutt-supporting Hoosiers in the galleries would hear none of it. One ranking Indiana politico was said to have threatened to "organize Willkie clubs all over the State" if McNutt withdrew. But he withdrew. None of the withdrawing leaders expressed it more bluntly than Senator Lucas, of Illinois, whose friends had expected him to run a close race.

"Had this been a free and open convention, I would not have hesitated to make the race," Lucas told the convention. But last night I saw this convention cheer until it was hoarse so that President Roosevelt would be drafted.

"It seems to me that if the President wants Secretary Wallace as a running-mate we should accept it, because after all it is President Roosevelt who will have to carry the load."

Bankhead Refused to Toss in the Towel

Very definitely not withdrawing was Speaker Bankhead, who before the convention made Wallace unanimous, was to poll 329 and a fraction votes against 627.7 for the Secretary of Agriculture.

Bankhead, who for eight years has bowed to the President on legislative matters, pushing through measures he did not himself approve, this time refused to budge. He was said to have resisted even a personal appeal from the President.

It was around the Bankhead nomination, the first pent-up anti-Wallace demonstration broke. Twenty States, mostly Southern, joined in the Alabaman's 20-minute parade. And it was then that the "we want a Democrat" cries were heard.

The booing of Wallace was to come later, when the Secretary's name was placed in nomination. It was a cruel ordeal for the Iowan and his wife, both of whom were present. Wallace, philosophic by nature, sat stoically through the demonstrations. But attractive Mrs. Wallace, who had flown from Des Moines to see her husband nominated, was frequently in tears. Wallace had prepared an acceptance speech, but he was persuaded not to make it. Seconding speeches by such men as House Majority Leader Rayburn and Federal Loan Administrator Jones failed to silence the hostile shouts. But when Mrs. Roosevelt came before the convention just before the balloting they were stilled. It was a crucial moment and Mrs. Roosevelt won, calming the hall. The voting started just after her quietly serious note.

Though the final vote for Wallace was made unanimous by Senator John H. Bankhead's motion, the record of Thursday night's dissension had gone out to every late radio listener in the country, and it did not do party unity prospects any good. It was not the prologue third term managers sought for the President's later acceptance speech.

In the end, it was not the New Deal strategy board nor the withdrawal of other New Deal contenders that put the Wallace nomination over. It was the vote of the Democratic "machine" delegations that saved the day. The Kelly-Nash group delivered 55 of Illinois' 58 to Wallace; Mayor Hague's New Jersey delegation gave a solid 32. "Boss" Edward Hull Crump, of Memphis, held Tennessee's 22 in line and Senator Guffey salvaged 68 of Pennsylvania's 72.

How deeply those now in control of the Democratic Party are concerned over Republican November prospects was reflected in every last item of business in Chicago. Echoes of the Philadelphia upsurge for Willkie came back to haunt Democratic delegates here time and again. Plain now was the Democratic jockeying to hold their convention after the Republicans. The Administration rush to quiet the charge of "war party" leveled by Republicans was reflected in the speeches and the even more strongly isolationist platform adopted in Chicago. The last-minute decision on Wallace as a third-term running mate was undoutedly influenced by the Republican Convention's choice of McNary.

And there were some at this Democratic convention who believed that the President himself decided to run only after Willkie's taunting challenge. The Republican nominee always has insisted that nothing could make a G. O. P. victory more certain than the third term candidacy of the President.

Convention Strategists Took No Chances

The Democratic convention in Chicago was smartly planned by the men around the President to meet every political contingency. Nothing the Republicans did was overlooked, in candidates, platform or strategy, down to the last-minute kidnaping of the Republican convention theme song: "God Bless America."

Grown leary of white rabbits, some of the more discouraged Democrats who fled from this town on Friday feared the whole thing had been too cleverly planned for the Democratic Party's own good. Managers would have done better, these thought, had they concentrated on pumping a little genuine enthusiasm into delegates at the start. Farley's parting from the Democratic National committee as of August 17 failed to add zest to their spirits. "Big Jim" failed to "take a walk" but he likewise failed to make any predictions on the outcome of the November elections. Farley seldom before has been loathe to make forecasts. And they are usually right.

The President and Farley have not actually broken. Old and close friends seldom do. But a growing estrangement, climaxing at this convention, has been evident ever since the President stopped advising with his Postmaster General on political moves. The President now consults Farley rarely, relying instead on the Hopkins' circle, but Mrs. Roosevelt never fails to ask his advice on all of her political moves.

This was brought out into the open one day last week as the Democratic chairman sat misty-eyed and with hurt feelings plainly showing. He told of Mrs. Roosevelt's unfailing readiness to talk political matters over in advance with him. He told how she called before flying to the Democratic convention.

"She said she would be guided entirely by my judgment and I told her by all means she should come," said Farley.

Then he continued:

"As a matter of fact, Mrs. Roosevelt is a very close personal friend of mine. I have always had the highest regard for her.

"There has never been a time that she did not consult me before taking any important political step. So she was running true to form last night when she called."

"Is that for quotation?" a reporter asked.

"Yes," said Farley.

Farley Not Consulted on Choice of Wallace

The record of the President's own few-and-far-between contacts with Farley disclosed piecemeal over two week's of Chicago press conference. In one revealing moment, Farley admitted that the President had not communicated with him during the entire week preceding the convention, from Sunday to Sunday.

Mrs. Roosevelt called Farley by telephone at 8:20 p. m. Tuesday to inform him what the Democratic chairman already knew from reading late afternoon papers—that Senator Barkley was about to read a statement on the President's behalf. Farley was not consulted at all as to the President's selection of Secretary Wallace for Vice President, nor had he been consulted about the recent appointments to the Cabinet of Stimson and Knox. Hopkins not only was advised but worked with the President and Barkley on the Tuesday night statement. Hopkins was one of the first if not the first consulted on the selection of Wallace.

Another of the President's original 1933 "brain trust" was a prominent figure at this convention. He was Rexford Guy Tugwell, close friend of both the President and Hopkins, and a booster for Wallace for the Vice Presidential nomination.

Reports were abroad that Tugwell may return to the Washington political scene, this time as Secretary of Agriculture, if the President and Wallace are elected. As the convention adjourned, Tugwell, former Undersecretary of Agriculture and now on the New York Planning Commission, was being discussed in inner circles as a likely candidate should Wallace step up.

Also being talked about to succeed Wallace in event of his election was Chester C. Davis, a member of the Federal Reserve Board, one of the President's Defense Commissioners and former AAA administrator. Another possibility is Claude R. Wickard, formerly AAA director in the corn belt region, now Undersecretary of Agriculture, and already chosen as Wallace's political advisor and right-hand man in the campaign.

Wallace is expected to continue in the Cabinet until January 20. Win or lose in the campaign, he could not be Secretary of Agriculture after that date.

The third Henry Wallace to serve as editor of "Wallace's Farmer," 51, modest, professorial, active all his life in agricultural economics and experiments, Wallace with his AAA since 1933 has led the Government down many new roads of farm production control, subsidies and price pegging. His goal was and is "economic justice" for farmers.

He was the first important Administration figure ever to propose the President for a third term in a public speech.

He was roundly and publicly rebuked by the White House for doing so.

Times have changed.

Mark Sullivan Says

No Ghost Writer For Wendell Willkie

Republican Candidate Willkie, new in the spotlight, is being observed intently, for light on his character and temperament. Among signs there is high importance in a remark Mr. Willkie made to a friend, as reported in The New York Times.

"I have never in my life delivered a speech which I have not written myself, and I am not going to change my habit now."

In other words, no "ghost writing."

MARK SULLIVAN

What is that a sign of? Why is that more fundamental than some positions Mr. Willkie may take on public questions?

It is because this determination by Mr. Willkie will underlie all his positions on public questions. What Mr. Willkie says and does will arise from what Mr. Willkie himself thinks and is. His record, at the end of the campaign, will be the record of Wendell L. Willkie—it will not be a synthetic summary of the contributions of a "brain trust." If elected, Mr. Willkie's record at the end of his Presidency will be the record of his own leadership of the Nation. Because his record will be that, it will have unity, pattern, consistency of direction. Mr. Willkie's record as President, if he is elected, will not be the sum of happy ideas contributed by miscellaneous advisers—advisers so varied, so often contradictory, and so frequently dropped to take up new ones, that the total record they make is a zigzag, forward-and-reverse motion toward no fixed point whatever.

Mr. Willkie's determination to do his own speech writing reflects, on his part, integrity of personality. I use that phrase, "integrity of personality," as having a special, broad meaning. Integrity in the ordinary sense, financial integrity, integrity in personal relations, integrity in the sense of scorn for deliberate deception—practically every public man has that. One can hardly think of any public man against whom could be made any charge against his honesty in that ordinary, narrow sense.

But integrity of personality, as evidenced by refusal to use ghost writers, has a special and precious quality. It means that a man is what he seems to be. It means that the picture of himself which he shows to the public, through his speeches, is the true picture of his actual self. It means that the man the public sees is the man his intimates see. The picture of Mr. Willkie, as seen by the public who follow his addresses, will not be any chameleon composition made up largely of the contributions of ghost ideas and glittering phrases.

If the public grasps the quality which Mr. Willkie implies when he says that his speeches will reflect his own mind, himself alone and himself as he is—if the public appreciates that, then the country will have a high standard of integrity of personality. It will have confidence in public men who conform to this standard. And that confidence in public characters will be an aid to the functioning of our Government and social system. For democracy can only function through use of symbols; and of all the symbols there are, the personalities of public men are the most important. When the symbol is one thing today, a different thing tomorrow, the country is confused, divided, uncertain.

Ghost writing has come to be too much condoned. Formerly, when done at all, it was kept behind the scenes. A hard-pressed public man might ask a friend, or subordinate to get data or material for him; or even to write a speech, or part of a speech. When the speech was perfunctory, such as the dedication of a monument, there was no serious impropriety. But within recent years, it has come to be taken for granted that public men accept from ghost writers not only contributions of data but actually the ideas they give out, the policies they lay down. Such a notion reduces a public man to the status of a mere vocal apparatus, a phonograph.

Hoover Wrote His Own Speeches

The step Mr. Willkie now takes to insure greater faith in the intellectual integrity of public men was also taken, a few months ago, by former President Hoover. Mr. Hoover had been, most unjusty, a victim of that cynicism which assumes that public men do not write their own speeches. So far had this cynicism gone that a writer in Harper's Magazine stated, starkly, in the most taken-for-granted manner: "Mr. Hoover practically never wrote a speech of his own."

Mr. Hoover decided that this sort of untrue charge was not only a wrong to him personally, but a detriment to the public good. He took steps about it. In Harper's Magazine last January appeared a retraction so wholehearted and conspicuous as to be a landmark in journalism. It was entitled, "An Apology to Mr. Hoover." It read:

"In an article on ghost writing in the October issue . . . it was stated that former President Hoover practically never wrote a speech of his own. The fact is Mr. Hoover's speeches have invariably been written by himself. We say this after opportunity for investigation both through original manuscrpts and associates of Mr. Hoover, who are in a position to speak authoritatively. We apologize to the former President and a great public servant for a most unfortunate error. We deeply regret it and gladly take this opportunity to rectify it now."

Roosevelt Used Drafts by Others

Years from now, when the story of President Roosevelt is written, a reason will be seen for the disappointment some of the public felt for him. The reason will be found, partly, in the extent to which Mr. Roosevelt's speeches arose not as original expressions of his own mind, but were accepted by him from others. Mr. Roosevelt could write speeches, good ones; he had a greater facility than most public men. But also he accepted speeches or parts of speeches from others, according to the statements of former associates.

Stories of ghost writing for Mr. Roosevelt teem, not only in the word-of-mouth gossip of Washington, but in published records, such as Mr. Raymond Moley's "After Seven Years." Mr. Moley tells not only of the speeches he himself wrote, or drafted, or amended; he tells also of ghosting by others: "He (Mr. Roosevelt) was at work putting the finishing touches on a fine speech Ernest Lindley had drafted for him."

Gen. Hugh Johnson the other day quoted two sentences from the speech Mr. Roosevelt made during his first campaign at Pittsburgh in October, 1932. That speech and these sentences became famous: "Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors," and "I regard reduction in Federal spending . . . as the most direct and effective contribution that Government could make to business."

Gen. Johnson quoted that, and added: "I wrote that. It is true, and it went over big at the time. But I'll bet that the distinguished gentleman who said it would rather have it unsaid than almost anything he uttered."

Herein lies the explanation of some of the charges of insincerity made against Mr. Roosevelt, and Mr. Roosevelt's resentment of such charges. The public remembers Mr. Roosevelt's utterances about balancing the budget as if they were promises originating with him; Mr. Roosevelt may remember them largely as ideas contributed by others.

U. S. Public Favors Occupation of Islands In Caribbean if Hitler Wins, Poll Shows

THE GALLUP POLL -- If Germany defeats England, should the United States take immediate possession of the English, French and Dutch territories in the area of the Panama Canal?

YES -- 87% NO -- 13%

Within a few hundred miles of the Panama Canal lie vital territories now owned by Great Britain, France and Holland. The Havana conference of the 21 American republics this week may discuss plans for assuring the future security of these possessions. If such plans are not successful, American public opinion may favor decisive action by the United States, a Nation-wide survey shows. Eighty-seven per cent say they would favor United States occupation if England loses.

87% Would Take Over Foreign Holdings Near Canal

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Copyright, 1940, by American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., July 20.—If the Havana Conference of the 21 American Republics adjourns next week without reaching a decision on the fate of the European-owned territories in the Western Hemisphere, there is likely to be strong sentiment in this country for United States defense of the territories — alone if necessary.

GALLUP

That fact is revealed today in a Nation-wide survey conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

From the standpoint of the United States, much will doubtless depend on the success of England in standing-off the German blitzkrieg. But the Institute survey shows that an overwhelming majority of more than 6 to 1 (87 per cent) say the United States should take immediate possession of the British, French and Dutch territories near the Panama Canal, if necessary, in the event of the British defeat.

Plans for dealing with the problem of the European-owned territories are many. Cuba will present to the Havana Conference a plan for joint Pan-American control of them under a mandate system. Variations of this proposal may be introduced. A previous Institute survey, reported June 14, found 81 per cent approving a plan for joint Pan-American purchase of the territories.

Should one of these joint-protectorate proposals not be adopted by the 21 republics, however, the present survey gives striking evidence that the people of the United States are determined not to see former British, French and Dutch possessions fall to Germany and Italy.

Behind this impressive majority sentiment, the voters' comments show, is a sharp awareness of the whole problem of defending the United States and the rest of the hemisphere. The survey found no indications whatsoever of "imperialistic" sentiment.

"If necessary, the United States should take the initiative because we're the only Nation in this hemisphere with a fleet strong enough to defend the Caribbean," a typical Eastern voter commented.

Voters in every State in the Union were asked: "If Germany defeats England, should the United States take immediate possession of the English, French and Dutch territories in the area of the Panama Canal?"

Their replies were:

Should Take Possession If Necessary	87%
Should Not Take Possession	13%

About one voter in eight (13 per cent) said he was undecided or without an opinion on the question.

Echoes 117-Year-Old Monroe Doctrine

The average American might have a difficult time explaining just what the Monroe Doctrine is, but the interesting fact is that majority sentiment in today's Institute survey underlines once more the essential principle expounded by President James Monroe 117 years ago. Monroe told the European statesmen of his day that "any attempt to extend their system" to the Western Hemisphere would be considered dangerous to American peace and safety.

Today, more than a century later, an analysis of voters' comments shows that the same idea motivates American public opinion with regard to the Caribbean. Here are the most frequent comments, in the order of mention by the voters:

1. If England is defeated, the territories should be occupied in national self-defense—they would provide harbors and bases for the defense of the United States and the rest of the Continent.
2. They should be occupied to prevent a German or Italian foothold in the New World.
3. They should be occupied to screen "America's lifeline"—the Panama Canal—from European attack.

A small section of the public, representing 4 per cent of those interviewed in the Institute survey, attached qualifications to their replies. The principal qualifications were that (1) the plan should not involve war on the part of the United States (2) the plan should be agreeable to the people of the territories themselves, and (3) the plan should have the support of the other nations of the Western Hemisphere.

Despite the occasional reservation that "we don't want to go to war over the Caribbean," previous Institute surveys have shown that this area is definitely one for which the majority of the people of the United States would be willing to fight. Last month the Institute asked: "If Germany defeats the Allies, should the United States fight if necessary to keep Germany out of the British, French and Dutch possessions located in the area of the Panama Canal?" Eighty-four per cent answered, "Yes"; 16 per cent said, "No."

Not Sectional Or Party Issue

As with other questions of American foreign policy, today's survey reveals a striking degree of unanimity in both major parties and in all sections of the United States. Politics, the survey indicates once more, still stop at "the water's edge."

The vote of Democrats and Republicans is as follows:

	Favoring Occupation	Opposing Occupation
Democrats	89%	11%
Republicans	86	14

Sectionally the greatest support for a policy of occupation-if-necessary comes from the Southern States—nearest in point of geography to the Caribbean. Even in the Middle West, however, the vote averages more than 4 to 1.

	Favoring Occupation	Opposing Occupation
New England, Mid-Atlantic	87%	13%
East Central	84	16
West Central	87	13
South	94	6
West	88	12

As the Pan-American conference meets in Havana this week, German diplomacy is reported to have warned Latin-American nations to have nothing to do with proposals of the United States for inter-American solidarity in military and economic spheres. But the Institute survey gives more than a hint that the people of the United States are prepared to stand alone, if necessary, to defend their interests in the crucial Caribbean.

District Didoes

Hildreth, Circus Fan, Put Over Suffrage Plank

By James D. Secrest

It took a man who had experience with circuses to get the District suffrage plank in in the Democratic platform.

Melvin D. Hildreth, the national committeeman, who apparently pulled the wires to get the plank, however vague, in the platform, is a lawyer by profession, but a circus fan by choice. Consequently the hulabaloo at Chicago was nothing new to him; he reveled in it.

A former president of the Circus Association, which saved the circus from oblivion a few years ago. Hildreth has at times played amateur clown in the shows.

What the District suffrage plank now needs is a high-powered lobbyist if it's ever to get beyond the dead-wood stage.

Members of Congress who are sincerely interested in giving Washingtonians the vote often express amazement that the citizens and the press talk a great deal about suffrage, but rarely do anything effective to get it on the Senate or House floor.

"Why don't the people of Washington do some lobbying for suffrage if they really want to get results?" one influential member asked recently.

Another obstacle to any favorable action by Congress on suffrage is the sharp split in the ranks of Washington civic and trade leaders. They fall into three classes:

First, are those hostile to any form of the franchise or local self-government. They much prefer the status quo in which a few insiders run the Capital.

Second is the group that wants only national representation and all the dignity of having District residents in the House and the Senate and the privilege of voting for the President. They do not wish to go the whole democratic way, however, and have local self-government.

The third group wants both local suffrage and national representation and is especially anxious to "throw the rascals out," i. e., the clique of Washingtonians-Marylanders-Virginians, which, they allege, control the Distict.

Perhaps the largest bloc of citizens, however, just don't give a hang. They either vote back home or have just ceased to care so long as their jobs hold out.

The failure of the suffrage cause is by no means due to local disunity and ineptitude.

Regardless of what the Democratic Party may write into its platform in the heat of a convention, there is little prospect of the House passing any District suffrage legislation so long as the Southern bloc is in the saddle as at present.

The Capitol hostility to votes for Washingtonians is not based wholly on racial grounds either.

There are many members of both the House and the Senate who believe that it would be a mistake for Congress to surrender control of the National Capital regardless of the petty trouble such administration incurs. They are familiar with the history of the early government in Philadelphia and of the seats of governments in other countries and think it not impossible that mobs might again storm the doors of the national legislature.

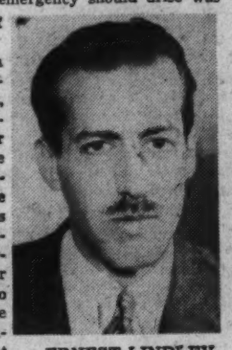
The department of vehicles and traffic is toying with the idea of requiring all drivers' permits to carry photos of the driver so that they may not be exchanged or obtained fraudulently.

Let's hope that the pictures will be better than the usual passport or civil service photos.

Ernest Lindley Says

Choice of Wallace Wise for Democrats

There are speakers more forceful and dynamic than Henry Wallace. There were men at Chicago whom it would have been more expedient to nominate, men who would have pacified this or that group of Democratic leaders, or perhaps brought more votes to the ticket, but there was none who seemed better qualified to become President of the United States. Ability to succeed to the Presidency if the emergency should arise was the chief reason for the choice of Wallace.



ERNEST LINDLEY

On Thursday morning, July 18, an influential delegate for whose judgment the President has respect, called him in Washington to recommend the nomination of another man for the Vice Presidency. He recited the advantages of nominating this man, with whom the President for several years has been on the best personal and political terms. It would compel Garner and Jesse Jones and their friends to give their blessing to the ticket; it would appease the party regulars throughout the country, Jim Farley included, and at the same time arouse no serious objections among Roosevelt's liberal followers. Moreover, this man, because of his popularity and experience, could be helpful as a liaison man between the White House and Congress during the next four years.

The President replied in substance: ". . . This matter is too important to be influenced by personal feelings or any consideration of political expediency. We've got to pick the man who is best qualified to serve the entire country—a man who can succeed me in the Presidency if the emergency arises."

The friendly delegate mildly remonstrated at the suggestion that the President might not survive a third term.

"Old man Harrison caught cold at his inaugural and never recovered," the President replied. "We can't afford to take a chance on that. We must have a man who is qualified, if the need arises, to move in and carry on."

The President expressed his high personal regard for the candidate just recommended to him, but concluded by asking his friend to support Henry Wallace.

The President's selection of Wallace came as a surprise to many New Dealers. For the President and Wallace, although they have worked together for almost eight years, have never been especially chummy. To the general public Wallace may be known as a "New Dealer." Actually he was an agrarian Republican who left his party in 1928 to support Al Smith, and in 1932 was called upon by Roosevelt to help draft his farm speech. Wallace had not been active in organization politics, but his name and views carried weight in the farm belt—as his father's had before him.

Never Belonged To Inner Clique

Wallace has never belonged to the intimate White House clique, of which the leading members in recent years have included Harry L. Hopkins, Robert H. Jackson, Thomas G. Corcoran, Leon Henderson and Lowell Mellett. A year or so ago magazine articles based upon material which came chiefly from Corcoran and his allies specifically excluded Wallace from the list of New Dealers. It was explained that he was so far outside that the New Dealers—meaning Corcoran and his aides—kept contact with him only indirectly through an economist in the Department of Agriculture.

Corcoran never has been friendly to Wallace. And two years ago the "inner circle" was privately denouncing Wallace as a "traitor" to the New Deal. That was during the celebrated attempt to "purge" the party in the 1938 primaries.

Wallace refused to collaborate in the purge. The first test came in the Iowa senatorial primary when the New Dealers backed Otha Wearin aginst Senator Gillette, who had voted against the Supreme Court plan. Wallace was importuned to declare himself in favor of Wearin. When the efforts of others failed, the President himself all but commanded Wallace to support Wearin.

Wallace smilingly but firmly stood his ground. Harry L. Hopkins, a native of the State, although he had never voted there, declared his support of Wearin. Later Hopkins established his residence in Iowa, and the President, in talks with influential Iowans, specifically encouraged them to get behind Hopkins as a Presidential Candidate. In these and other conversations he belittled Wallace's political qualifications, speaking of him as a man who "lacked political it" and didn't grasp the intricacies of practical politics. He never, however, spoke disparagingly of Wallace's real abilities.

With the passage of time many of the New Dealers have acknowledged that Wallace's practical judgment was superior to theirs—and the President's—in the 1938 venture.

Wallace's stand in 1938 strengthened a friendship with Jim Farley. Wallace is probably the only top-ranking liberal in the Roosevelt Administration whose nomination would not have been regarded by Farley as a sort of personal insult. Farley has often said that the only trouble with Wallace is that he wasn't born a Democrat.

Those who have followed the intricacies of personal politics in the Roosevelt Administration know that Roosevelt's choice of Wallace was not influenced by the feeling of personal intimacy which he has for Hopkins, or for Bob Jackson. It sprang from respect for Wallace's ability.

When Hopkins arrived in Chicago to organize the Roosevelt support, he advanced the thesis that the Vice Presidential nominee should be chosen by only one test: "Who would make the best Vice President?" This was widely misunderstood to mean literally Vice President: a man to preside over the Senate and serve as liaison between the White House and Congress. What Hopkins meant was: "Who would be best qualified to succeed to the Presidency, if the emergency should arise?"

Should Choose Best Successor

Before the convention, Supreme Court Justice Douglas was almost certainly the first choice of the President as well as of Hopkins. This assumed that Cordell Hull would not consent to run—although many of the New Dealers never have considered Hull outstandingly qualified to succeed to the Presidency. Hopkins mentioned Wallace, Byrnes, McNutt, Rayburn, and others who might be considered.

It became clear that Douglas's nomination would be very difficult to bring about and would leave many hard feelings. Moreover, the New Deal delegates showed no particular interest in him. For Wallace, however, there was real support, especially among leaders of both farm and labor groups. Among the delegates as a whole, most of them regular organization Democrats, there was more support probably for half a dozen other candidates. But Wallace, it was plain, could be nominated without duress. This removed the practical obstacle which eliminated Douglas.

Wallace is a deep and steady man. His speeches read better than they sound. And those who long for a more generous attitude toward persons of differing views than often has been demonstrated by the Roosevelt Administration, who long for a sincere effort to achieve national unity, will find in Wallace's old speeches that he has been preaching that doctrine for many years.

With Wallace the Democrats have a rare ticket: Two men who are equipped by experience and knowledge to be President of the United States.

Havana Parley Weighs Hitler's Threat to Americas' Trade, Security

21 Republics Talk United Front Plans

By Barnet Nover

On the face of it, the conference which opened in Havana yesterday is a strictly American affair. The original call for the conference came from the President of the United States. The foreign ministers or their representatives who are in attendance are from 21 American Republics with no other nation officially participating. The agenda, approved by the governing board of the Pan American Union, deals strictly with inter-American problems—neutrality, the protection of the peace of the Western Hemisphere, economic cooperation among American States.

Actually the conference operates in a setting broad as the earth. Its raison d'etre was the succession of startling developments which occurred more than 3,000 miles away in Norway, the Low Countries, and France during the past three months. Its deliberations and its decisions will be affected at every turn by what happens overseas while it is in session. And its impact will not be confined to the nations of the New World, but will have world-wide repercussions whether the conference does much or little or nothing at all.

Pan Americanism as an ideal is almost as old as the existence of independent nations in this hemisphere. During recent years it has made substantial progress whose milestones were the congresses of American states held at Montevideo in 1933, at Buenos Aires three years later, and at Lima and Panama last year. But Pan Americanism has never before been subjected to the tests which may soon arise.

Hitler Creates New Set of Problems

In overrunning Holland and France and forcing the latter country to accept a humiliating armistice which makes the French government a tool of the Third Reich, Hitler has created a whole new set of problems for the Americas. But they are as nothing compared to the situation which will face this hemisphere if Great Britain is defeated and the British Fleet is destroyed. For the peace of this hemisphere, a peace which permitted sentiments of inter-American friendship to develop, was only made possible by the existence of the British Fleet which stood between the Americas and any continental European aggressors.

There was and there remains, of course, the Monroe Doctrine proclaimed by the United States in 1823. But the Monroe Doctrine only possesses the force which the United States is able to employ against the nation or nations which seek to flout the doctrine's prohibitions against any further colonization of this hemisphere. If the British Fleet is destroyed, the ability of the United States to implement the Monroe Doctrine will largely depend on the time which this Nation and the other republics of this hemisphere are vouchsafed to build up their defenses. And the necessary time may be lacking.

Hitler's successful blitzkrieg in the Low Countries and France and the possibility that similar tactics may overcome British resistance in the near future, have brought the New World face to face with an entirely new and extraordinarily difficult set of circumstances.

In the first place, it has tended to undermine the security of every nation in this hemisphere. We in this country have heard considerable talk during recent weeks regarding the relative defenselessness of the United States on land and in the air and even at sea where, in the past, our principal defense efforts have been made. The American Fleet is next to the British in size. But whether at the present time, and for some time to come it would be equal to the task of defending this hemisphere against any possible combination of aggressive powers is not at all certain.

All in all, however, the United States is infinitely better prepared than are the republics to our south. Their armies, air forces and navies are negligible. Alone, there is not a nation south of the Rio Grande which is in a position to defend itself against any European nation or bloc of nations in command of the Atlantic. And there is not a Latin American nation which is not plagued by a fifth column problem which may prove difficult to control if Hitler is victorious.

Role of Military Defense Is Minor

The problem of American military defense thus looms large at the Havana parley, but it is a problem which, except in a limited way, will not play any large role in the deliberations. Indeed, the United States delegation appointed by President Roosevelt to accompany Secretary Hull includes no Army or Navy officers.

The conference will discuss, however, the question of the fate of French, Dutch and British colonies in the event of a German victory. Some time ago the Congress of the United States went flatly on record in opposition to the transfer of sovereignty over European colonies in this hemisphere from one non-American nation to another. This interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine the German government has challenged. As long as the war in Europe goes on, Germany's unwillingness to accept the fiat of the United States in the Caribbean or elsewhere in this hemisphere is only of academic importance, an irritant rather than a danger. Should the war end in a German triumph it would at once become real, however. For practical reasons it would then make little difference whether an actual transfer or soverignty over, say, Martinique or Guadeloupe or Dutch Giana, is made from France or the Netherlands to Germany. The system which a victorious Reich may establish in Europe is likely to be one which permits no nation to be truly independent. In other words, without technically taking over the European colonies in this hemisphere Germany would be in a position to use them as military, naval and air bases from which to threaten the Panama Canal.

That the United States could or would permit such a situation to develop is most unlikely. For this country to seize the French, Dutch and British possessions, however, would give every anti-United States element in Latin America a chance to revive the now dormant cries of Yankee imperialism and issue diatribes against the so-called Colossus of the North. Fifth column elements in every republic to our south have already begun to ring the changes on this theme.

Trusteeship Seen As Alternative

There are, however, alternatives to American seizure of orphaned European colonies likely to fall into Hitler's hands. One would be the creation with the consent of all the nations of the New World of a state of trusteeship over such possessions with the United States or a group of American nations given a mandate over them. This question is certain to come up at the Havana parley, as is the more immediate problem of what action the 21 Republics should take in the case of Martinique where, it has been reported, a part of the French fleet rides at anchor with British naval units standing by to see that these French war vessels do not escape to France. At Oran, a somewhat similar situation led to actual warfare.

It is hardly to the interests of the New World that the Oran episode should be repeated on this side of the water. But what, if anything, can or will be done to prevent it is not at all clear. At any rate one of the problems on the Havana agenda touches directly on this Martinique question. Article I, Section 2 proposes the "examination, in the light of present circumstances, of the standards of neutrality set forth in the third article of the "General Declaration of Neutrality of the American Republics," adopted at the Panama meeting on October 3, 1939.

The most immediate danger to this hemisphere lies not in the military sphere nor with regard to such problems as the future of European colonies on this side of the Atlantic, but in the realm of trade.

U. S. Can't Buy All Their Surplus Goods

The United States is Latin America's best customer. We take about a third of exports of the 20 republics. In 1938 that import trade was valued at $550,813,000. Since the present war began our purchases from Latin America have markedly increased in certain categories. But there is no likelihood that this country can profitably absorb the rest or even a sizeable portion of the balance of Latin American exports. We are, for instance, not in the market for Argentinian wheat or beef (except a small amount of canned beef), Chilean copper and nitrates, or Brazilian cotton. We produce these commodities in sufficient quantities to supply our own needs and in some cases, cotton, for example, far beyond our own needs. Our consumption of coffee is now at record level. But we cannot use all the coffee which is produced in Brazil, Colombia and the other countries that grow the coffee bean.

It is obvious, therefore, that now and for a long time to come the nations of Latin America will have to depend on other markets than the United States for the largest percentage of their exports.

They have not had an easy time of it in this regard during recent years. The dislocation of exchanges, the growth of autarchy, the rise of the barter system, the lowering of Europe's standard of living as a result of rearmament, and finally the war and the British blockade, have made it difficult for the Latin American nations to carry on normal trade with Europe, which takes the bulk of their products. But in the past, at least, trade with Europe was without political dangers. It won't be if Germany is victorious.

In 1938 Germany took 10.3 per cent of all Latin American exports and supplied those countries with 16.5 per cent of their imports. Trade with Germany was a problem because of the barter system favored by the Third Reich. But the volume of German imports from Latin America was not overwhelming. If Hitler dominates Europe, however, he may add the conquered countries to Germany's economic orbit. Indeed, there is every reason to believe he will do so. That means he will be able to exercise the power of life and death over the trade of individual Latin American nations. They will have to do business with him on his terms and these terms may not be limited to questions of payment. They may also involve political conditions.

Hitler Would Control Trade

Thus, a nation which happens to have a political system to which Hitler objects, or a press which is critical of the Third Reich, or statesmen who are anti-Nazi or pro-United States may find its trade with a totalitarian Europe cut off; those who show a readiness to go along with Hitler will be favored. In other words there is a real possibility that Hitler may use the trade weapon to establish a real Nazi foothold in the Americas.

The prospect is unpleasant for the nations of Latin America. It is no less unpleasant for us. For by sowing dissension in this hemisphere, Hitler would be endangering our security.

How combat the rising menace? The Havana conference will have several alternatives presented to it. One may be the creation of a giant marketing board, largely financed by the United States, which would serve as the sole medium for trade between this hemisphere and the rest of the world. In that way, Latin American nations would be able to dispose of their surpluses while, at the same time, being shielded from pressure by the totalitarian masters of Europe. But the difficulties in the way of such a plan are enormous. It would require an elaborate international system of production control. There would certainly be endless bickerings over quotas. And some of the nations, particularly those furthest removed from the sheltering protection of the American Fleet and air force and most dependent on Europe for their exports, are fearful that the cartel plan might produce the very dangers it would be designed to avert.

A less ambitious scheme which is being talked of in some circles is that the cartel system be limited to a few commodities—coffee, sugar, corn, etc. Others insist that something ought to be done to help Latin-American nations diversify their production and be less dependent on one or two or three export commodities than they are.

There are, indeed, almost as many schemes of inter-American economic defense as there are experts grappling with the problem. The conferees at Havana will thus have no easy time of it. The plant of Pan Americanism has had a slow growth and a healthy growth. Whether it is now strong enough to stand up against winds of disaster blowing in from Europe is not certain. The Havana conference will be a real test of that strength.

Representatives of the Americas are meeting at Havana to devise ways and means of keeping war clouds over other continents from spreading to the Western Hemisphere. Lines indicate Latin-American nations which have joined with the United States in drawing tight the bonds of inter-American cooperation.

Germans Peddle Horror Photos in Americas

By Edward Stuntz

There is a printer's ink war in Latin America—a determined, well organized propaganda advance into the homes and minds of the Spanish and Portuguese speaking citizens.

The war has been conducted from four general headquarters—Berlin, London, Paris and Washington.

Presumably the propaganda activities of Paris news agencies and newspapers now are curtailed. Washington continues efforts to show Latin Americans the North American way of life through the division of cultural affairs at the State Department. London expounds its views through radio broadcasts and services to South American newspapers. But Germany is thrusting much of its genius for method into the battle for "thinking" influence in American countries under the Southern Cross.

This story will deal with the German method.

The writer has before him more than 50 books, pamphlets, magazines, lealets, posters and postcards, obtained from a German legation in a northern republic of South America.

The documentary evidence of the German method is unique in a clever appreciation of Latin American sentimental attachment to France. Nowhere in the literature, circulated before Paris fell, is there allusion to France as anything more than the "innocent" dupe of an empire-voracious Britain.

In hatred for England, the literature reaches Wagnerian crescendoes.

England is Accused Of Betraying Portugal

There is one book, for example, written by Pedro Gonzalez Blanco and published in Mexico, 1940. It purports to show that Great Britain since 1373 consistently has been treacherous to her oldest ally—Portugal.

The book, "England and Her Oldest and Most Faithful Ally," is an annotated history of British-Portuguese relations. It relates allegations of British "perfidy," "treaty violation," "assault," "rapaciousness," "lust."

Gonzalez asserts his book was written in 1938 with "all possible objectivity," and adds:

"If it came out as terrible requisitory against England, blame it on historical document, not on me."

From his book, a reader would gather that England throughout modern history had been unspeakably brutal to Portugal, Spain, France and other continental powers. The divorce of Brazil from Portugal is attributed to the machinations of British power-lust.

As to France—posters and postcards picture her as a nation mortgaged to the whim of a combined British upper class and Jewish banking entente.

One poster entitled "La Liberte" pictures variously:

1. For the French soldier—"liberty to die;"
2. For the French family—"liberty to starve;"
3. For the French profiteer—"liberty to profiteer."

All of these show caricatures of the French poilu, the French wife and family, the French workman, as the victims of war's cruelty.

Most of the pamphlets are of Berlin edition, translated into excellent Spanish. Others, however, are in German, and a number are in English. Adolf Hitler's more recent Reichstag speeches are there in form for easy distribution.

Booklets on the "brutalities" of the "British regime in Palestine," and on "British tyranny in Ireland" are well bound in black and white covers. So, also, is the German "White Book" entitled "The Polish Atrocities Against the German Minority in Poland."

This book carries more than 200 pages of military and police reports, and alleged personal depositions concerning the gamut of claimed atrocities suffered by the German minority. The pages abound in stories of eye-gouging, emasculation, violation, garroting, and virtually every known form of personal indignity or torture.

Sixty pages are devoted to photographs of corpses—many apparently in advanced stages of decomposition. The German captions ascribe such things as crushed skulls, shrapnel-perforated backs and torsos, mutilated fingers, arms, legs and breasts to Polish fiendishness.

Assert the English 'Stole' Gibraltar

(To the writer these pictures are reminiscent. Not so long ago in a warring country, he saw the same photograph of the cadaver of a Spanish peasant woman, used to illustrate the cruelty of the enemy on three different fronts. A garter clasp and shreds of a stocking on a remaining leg were easily identified in each successive appearance of the photo.)

Britain continues to bear the brunt of German accusation as the reader pores through page after page of the sample collection. Pictures identified as war-starved babies of the German World War period are shown in photographic contrast to sturdier children identified as Nazi youngsters of today with the warning to Winston Churchill in Spanish: "This will never happen again."

Another pamphlet, bearing no publishing house identification, shows pictures of British possessions, with footnotes as to how they came under the English crown.

This booklet attributes to the English an out-and-out "steal" of Gibraltar. Canada went to Britain, according to the booklet, when France was busied by war with Prussia and could not defend her territory. Jamaica, India, Australia, South Africa fell before the clever "brutality" of English sea lords.

Carrying its charges into Latin America, the booklet says that British Honduras was taken at the expense of defenseless Guatemala, that the Falkland Islands were wrested from Argentina in raids. (The literature does not discuss the Spanish conquistadores or their Portuguese counterparts, or the early colonial adventures of other nations.)

Chile's Nazis Hope To Make Nation A German Colony

Buenos Aires, Argentina, July 20. German official circles in Chile deny the existence of a fifth column there. The Nazi man in the street, however, is frequently heard to predict that Adolf Hitler, after conquering Great Britain, will cross the Atlantic and take Chile, or at least make southern Chile a German colony to protect the German minority there.

In a Santiago cabaret last week this reporter saw German and Chilean Nazis giving the Hitler salute during a patriotic number featuring the Chilean national anthem. At the same time in the same room adherents of the popular front government gave the clenched fist salute of the Communists and left wing Socialists. That was typical of the confusion in the Chilean situation.

The German ambassador, Baron Wilhelm von Schoen, is an old stager playing a cagey game, trying to prevent Nazi extremists from offending the Chileans, who have highly developed nationalistic and anti-foreign feelings. The Chileans have a reputation of being, like the Irish, "agin everybody." Therefore, the ambassador and old-time German business men and landowners, who are very wealthy and powerful in Chilean economic life, do their utmost to avoid incidents and the appearance of exerting foreign pressure.

Navy Promotions Too Slow

The failure to expand the American Navy comparable to that of other leading powers has worked a hardship on the personnel of the service which if continued will not only weaken the morale, but will also fail to attract to the service the type of personnel required for its effective operation. The promotions are so slow that to many of the officer-personnel their future appears most discouraging.

One critic puts it this way: "The peace-time service of the Navy falls hard on the lieutenants of which there are about 60 who average 40 years of age. At the present rate of promotions it will be that our 74's are commanded by centenarians, our 44's by heavy-bearded men in their dotage and our sloops of war by men far beyond the meridian and too cooled down with the years for the rigors of battle."

Presidential Campaign Wit

During a "log cabin raising" in Richmond, Va., this week Richmond Whigs were bringing in rough logs to the city for that purpose. A tried and true Democrat said to one of the Whig workers: "Why don't you skin those poles?" "Never mind," retorted the Tippecanoe boy, "we'll do the skinning at the polls in November."

Why Not a Farmer for President?

As a part of the argument in support of their Presidential candidate, Gen. William Henry Harrison ("Ole Tippecanoe"), the Whigs are urging the voters to elect a farmer instead of a lawyer.

"Every President since Washington," say the Whigs, "has been a lawyer. This means nothing against honest lawyers, but with things being equal we think the people would like to try a farmer. Gen. Harrison is a true-hearted farmer now on his farm at North Bend. Now is the time for the boys of the flail and scythe to do it."

DOMESTIC AFFAIRS

The Cunard Celebration

BOSTON, MASS.—Today in this city there was a colorful celebration. Mr. Cunard's first steamship, the Britannica, which inaugurated a new steamship service between London-Liverpool and this great American port, arrived late Thursday evening after an 18-day voyage including a call at Halifax.

All the ships in the harbor were decorated with flags of all nations. Bunting of various colors hung from the shops along the streets of Boston. "A galaxy of beauty stood on the piazzas of the Maverick House, Mr. Cunard's headquarters for the day, to watch the long military parade in honor of the occasion." Guns were fired in salute. Bonfires burned in celebration of the event.

In the evening a banquet was given in honor of Mr. Cunard's pioneer achievement. Officials of the city were his host. Appropriate speeches were delivered by Senator Daniel Webster and Justice Story. Toasts were drunk. This gala occasion marked the beginning of a new trans-Atlantic service by which Boston might some day rival its competing port, New York.

British and Chinese Relations Still Tense

CANTON, CHINA.—Notwithstanding that Great Britain has augmented her fleet on the China station to assure adequate protection to her merchant ships operating in these waters in the illegal opium trade, the Chinese government on its part has determined to put an end to the violation of its laws. A new weapon has been invented. The Mandarins have ordered built a large number of "fire-rafts" which will be floated alongside British naval vessels to set them afire. With the wind in the right direction it will be difficult to resist this unique weapon. The Chinese have put their old invention of firecrackers to good use.

French Colonists Demand Recall Of Gen. Valee

ALGIERS, ALGERIA.—The French colonists here have sent a petition to the government of His Majesty Louis Philippe demanding the recall of Gen. Valee in command of French troops in Algeria for his gross negligence and inefficiency in the operations against the Arabs. The colonists, particularly at Oran and Constantine, claim that Gen. Valee is not only unable to halt the daily raids of the Arabs against the French colonial posts, but "the whole Algerian campaign is disgustingly conducted and produces an indignant sense of military inefficiency of the government at Paris."

WAR IN EUROPE

War Reverts to Battle of Words as England Awaits Invasion

Hitler Answers Churchill's Speech, Says "British Face Destruction If They Brush Aside Peace Offer"

By Frank L. Dennis

Last week the war consisted principally of words and decisions, with acts only of secondary importance.

The words were those of Prime Minister Churchill of Britain, Fuehrer Adolf Hitler of Germany, and Generalissimo Francisco Franco of Spain.

The decisions were those of Britain to close the Burma road for three months; of Japan to adopt a one-party system; and of the Democratic Party in the United States to nominate Franklin D. Roosevelt for a third term.

The acts were an undertone: continued exchanges of air raids; continued attacks on shipping, with Germany striking again in the South Atlantic; and sporadic encounters between British and Italian forces.

Most of the words were ominous. Churchill's because he told Germany to do her worst, Hitler's because he promised that Germany would oblige, and Franco's because they presaged Spanish participation on the axis side, at least for a limited objective, Gibraltar.

Churchill Says British Asks No Mercy

In a broadcast to the empire Sunday, Churchill said:

"We must show ourselves equally capable of meeting a sudden violent shock, or what is perhaps a harder test—a prolonged vigil. But be the ordeal sharp or long—or both—we shall seek no terms, we shall tolerate no parley. We may show mercy; mercy; we shall ask none.

"Should the invader come to Britain there will be no placid lying down of the people in submission before him, as we have seen, alas! in other countries.

"We shall defend every village, every town, and every city. The vast mass of London itself, fought street by street, could easily devour an entire hostile army, and we would rather see London laid in ruins and ashes than that it should be tamely and abjectly enslaved.

" . . . we must prepare not only for the summer but for the winter, not only for 1941 but for 1942, when the war will, I trust, take a different form from the defensive in which it has hitherto been bound.

"There are vast numbers, not only in this island but in every land, who will render faithful service in this war but whose names will never be known, whose deeds will never be recorded. This is a war of the unknown warriors. But let all strive without failing in faith or in duty and the dark curse of Hitler will be lifted from our age."

Hitler Answers Prime Minister

Hitler replied, by way of a speech before the Reichstag Friday, that British statesmen apparently have no conception of the destruction which would be visited on England in case of a fight to the finish. (This coincided with reaction in Berlin immediately after Churchill's speech, to the effect that his reference to London meant Germany would not have to consider it an open city and could destroy it without conscience.)

"There is no ground for prolongation of the war," Hitler said.

"Churchill has begun to bomb the civilian population of Germany. Thus far I have hardly answered the bombardment, but when my answer comes it will be terrible for millions of people. Churchill should for a change believe me this once.

"I have relieved my conscience toward the things that will come . . . that is, if this last appeal to reason is unheeded by England."

Hitler added that if Britain brushed aside this "peace offer," the end would be "complete annihilation" of one of the other of the adversaries, and he was confident this would be Great Britain.

All this could be only words; but the chances are that it is a preface to one of the most gory chapters in human history, especially as British official silence after Hitler's speech indicated nothing was going to be done about the "peace offer."

Franco Voices Spain's Aspirations

Franco formally voiced Spain's aspirations—ominous to Britain—in a speech Wednesday to army, navy, and air force officers.

"There remains for us as a duty and a national mission the control of Gibraltar, expansion in Africa and continuance in the policy of unity," Franco said.

This, plus the reported presence of German soldiers in many parts of Spain, probably meant that at the time of the direct attack on England in force, there will be a drive on Gibraltar with Spanish and German soldiers and Italian naval and air forces participating.

As to when the main assault will come, no one knows, probably not even Hitler. There have been rumors from time to time that the zero hour was for certain days, as July 9, and later, July 19, but that's just guessing.

Hitler in his speech Friday merely said "Some day."

An important decision of last week, especially to China, was Britain's acquiesence to Japan's demand that the Burma road be closed, and that no more war materials be shipped to China by way of Hong Kong.

This means that, with the flow of supplies into China from French Indo-China already halted by Japanese demand, China is going to be hard put to maintain a successful stand against Japan's invading armies.

Britain's submission on this point simply was one of facing realities. By making such a concession—tentatively for only three months—she expects to keep out of trouble with Japan. As Churchill told the House of Commons: "His Majesty's governments were bound to have regard for the present world situation, nor could they ignore the dominant fact that we ourselves are engaged in a life or death struggle."

Japan Headed Toward Totalitarian Government

This achievement of Japanese diplomacy immediately was followed by the fall of the Japanese cabinet of Premier Yonai, probably as a prelude to the installation of a totalitarian type government headed by Prince Konoye, a former premier.

In the United States, the war wrought an unusual political situation, the nomination of a President for a third-term. In accepting the nomination of the Democrats, President Roosevelt said it was the world situation which had impelled him to be the nominee despite his desire to retire.

He felt it necessary that the United States maintain as influential a place as possible in world affairs, which means, he believes, having no lame duck President while foreign policy and national defense are paramount problems.

Some of the revealing incidents of the week were these:

Virginio Gayda, Mussolini's editorial mouthpiece, objected because three Swiss newspapers printed both British and Italian reports of the Anglo-Italian naval and air battle in the Mediterranean. He said the newspapers either had indicated a belief in the British version or had wondered which was correct. He called this "immeasurable pettiness," and said Switzerland must be more friendly to Italy.

Last Sunday was Bastile Day, and this year it was a French day of mourning.

The United States cut all red tape in the formality of admitting refugee English children, but Britain announced that lack of convoys precluded mass exodus, and that besides the sending of the children of moneyed families away had caused costly criticism and detriment to morale.

Hitler estimated for the Reichstag that Italy and Germany can draw on 130,000,000 men for military man power and 80,000,000 for other service. He said food supplies are guaranteed no matter how long the war may last.

Summary of the week:

LAND

The only land fighting last week took place in Africa, with Italy winning a British outpost on the Kenya-Ethiopian border near the source of the Nile. The Italians attacked the small fortress, Fort Moyale, for five days with planes, artillery, and tanks, finally driving off the Zulu garrison.

The capture of Fort Moyale was admitted by the British, who denied the additional Italian claim that the Somaliland front had been shortened by 20 miles through the Italian victories there. Importance of such a pinching-off of the British salient would be to shorten Italian communications in that area appreciably, along with some strategic advantage.

Thursday German troops occupied the French island of Quessant, opposite England's Land's End. This island may prove useful in the German attempt to blockade England, as it can be used as a base for attack of shipping plying the English Channel.

SEA

Italy got another taste Friday of British prowess at sea. The Italian cruiser Bartolomeo Colleoni, one of the fastest warships in the world at 40 knots, was sunk off Greece with a loss of approximately 250 men. The Italian vessel was accompanied by another, and both engaged the Australian cruiser Sydney and what London called "a small destroyer force." The second Italian cruiser fled, the British said.

Earlier in the week the ItIalians had claimed their air force had, by bombing and threat of bombing, split the British Mediterrannean force into three parts and had made Gibraltar untenable as a British naval base.

These claims were followed by reports from Africa that the great British battleship Hood had been so severely damaged by bombs that she would have to go home from Gibraltar for repairs on her gun turrets. British denied even that the Hood had been damaged.

The war at sea got close to the Americas again with the sinking of two British merchant ships in the West Indies area by a German raider. The German high command also said that 30,000 more tons of British shipping had been sunk between Wednesday and Friday.

The British put a question mark on the accuracy of German claims by pointing out that the total of all sinkings as claimed by Germany was greater than the actual British tonnage at the beginning of the war.

AIR

The war in the air last week was a continuation of the exchange of bombing raids between the British Isles and German-held territory.

Hitler said in his speech Friday that the raiding done by Germans has been relatively mild, by comparison with what is to come. He said he had not yet ordered any reprisals for the damage done German hospitals and schools by British bombs.

The German chief officially disclosed, too, that the German air arm has been the decisive weapon in the war to date. "Without it any bravery of land forces would have been in vain," he said in reporting on the battles against France and the Low Countries.

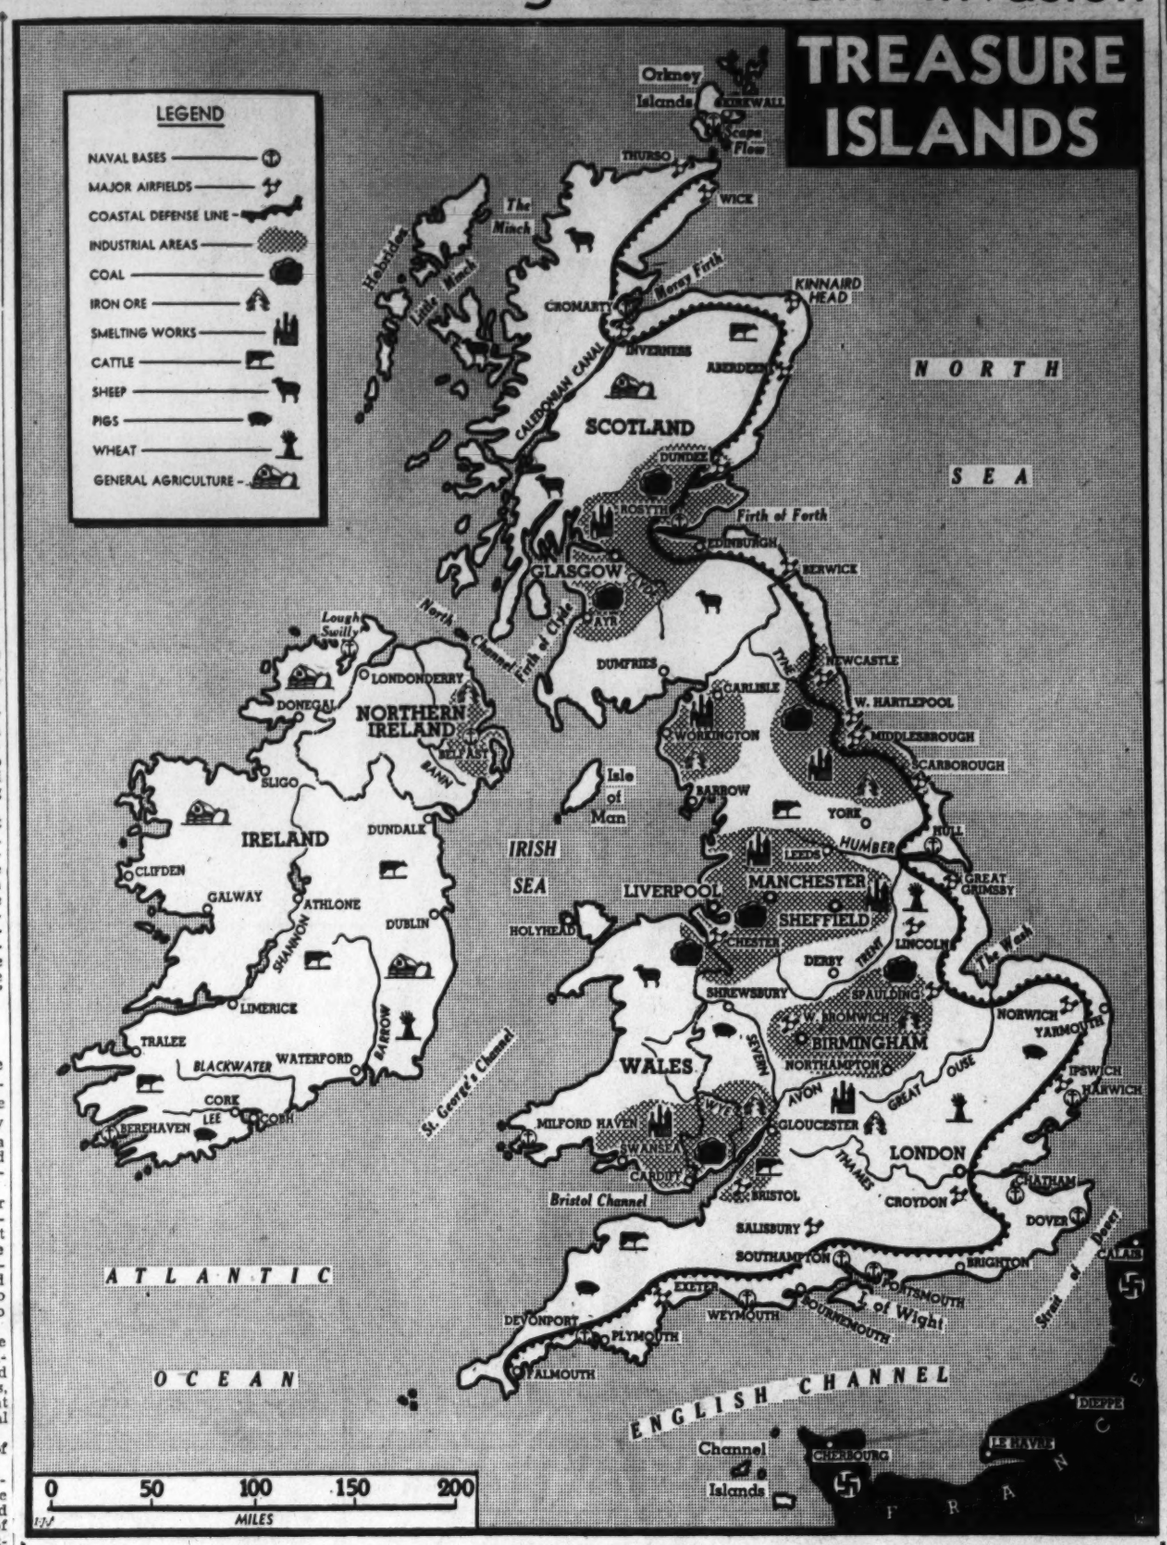
DIPLOMACY

Outstanding diplomatic achievement of the week was Japan's winning of the Burma road closing from Britain.

Hitler told the Reichstag that Britain's hope of stirring up trouble in the Balkans by prodding Russia into grabbing more of Rumania was doomed to failure. But he admitted that Russia's seizure of Rumanian territory had not been with the preknowledge of Germany. He admitted that Russian moves in the Balkans had caused him to discuss the matter with Russia and said the discussion had brought about a "new understanding" regarding the countries' respective spheres of influence.

Even so, the admission that Russia's activity in the Balkans last month was an independent move might mean that Russia will act on its own initiative again if the opportunity presents, and more detrimentally to Germany than to Britain.

Another diplomatic move of strange character was the severence of diplomatic relations by Spain with little Chile. At first the Spanish government said the move was due to Chile's strong anti-Nazi moves. Later, the explanation given was that fugitive Spanish republicans had been given a haven in the Chilean consulate. Whatever the reason, the move is a noteworthy straw in the wind of Europe's plans in relation to South America.



THE BRITISH ISLES have the world's greatest shipyards, banks with tremendous economic power, unlimited coal resources, forests of smoke-stacks. It is, says Hitler, one of his war aims to divest Britain of her economic power.

Up to 1850 British factories were without real competition. Since then many nations have challenged British industrial supremacy. In the Crimean War the English bested Russia. In the first World War they knocked aside Germany. Now Britain is threatened again by a great industrial power—Germany—a country that already has far outstripped her in producing finished iron and steel. Italy, Japan, the United States are other industrial powers making inroads into British markets.

The British Isles (94,000 square miles against Germany's 262,924) are head, heart and soul of the British Empire—greatest empire the world has ever known. Every raw material that an industrial country needs is found somewhere in the empire. (The United States and its possessions have most things—but lack nickel, rubber, tin.) The British Isles themselves export annually 35,000,000 or more tons of coal—and coal has for 100 years been the foundation of British economic strength.

In England a surprisingly high number of persons live normally on income from investments. Most of the population is in London or the industrial areas. Only 7 per cent of the population lives off the land. It is said that at one time in World War I England had food for only two weeks. England climbed to world manufacturing supremacy by sacrificing self-sufficiency. Her ships must come in.

Here's how England divides her work:

London—Commerce, marketing; politics; some manufacturing; bankers.

South Wales (Cardiff, Bristol)—Coal; metal refining; iron and steel processing. This is the "depressed area." The Duke of Windsor, when he was King Edward VIII, said something should be done about poverty, disease and squalor of workers in this region.

Birmingham area—Manufacturing; coal; iron ore. This is "Black England," home of heavy industries.

Liverpool, Manchester—Iron and steel; commerce; new industries (chemistry, rayon).

Newcastle, Middlesbrough—Heavy iron industries; shipbuilding; glass; smelting of imported ores; coal. Remember the saying about carrying coals to Newcastle?

Scottish lowlands (Glasgow, Edinburgh)—Coal; iron; steel; cotton textiles; ships.

Davis and Henderson: They Aid U. S. Defense

By Gerald G. Gross.

President Roosevelt went into the field to select three industrialists, a labor leader and an educator as members of the National Defense Advisory Commission. Then, to head the agricultural and price stabilization divisions, he chose two men in the government, two men who have been in his circle of advisors since the New Deal's infancy.

Chester C. Davis and Leon Henderson enlisted in the Administration within a few months of each other, back in 1933. Both are former newspaper reporters Both are dynamos of accomplishment and both are dividing their energies between their salaried jobs—the one as a governor of the Federal Reserve Board and the other as a members of the Securities and Exchange Commission—and the demanding duties of their defense posts.

Those parallels noted, there is little else they have in common. Davis, a Midwesterner, is the "solid" type, driving and detached and wrapped up in agricultural problems. Economist Henderson, Easterner and urbanite, has a wider spread of interests, is as volatile—temperamentally—as oil of wintergreen, and, in brief, possesses that thing called "color."

The writer knows of only one instance where Davis ever got up a good, fighting mad. That was on June 2, 1936, when he went to the trouble of issuing a formal denial of published reports that he would step out as a triple-A administrator to take a $50,000 position with a Chicago firm, all because of the friction between Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and Gen. W. I. Westervelt, a former AAA official, and himself.

"I have accepted no offer at a $50,000 salary or at any other salary," Davis stated. "In fact, no such offer has ever been made. My personal relationships with Gen. Westervelt were of the friendliest while he was in the AAA and have been ever since. There is no truth in any story of any friction between Secretary Wallace and myself."

Davis Likely Agriculture Head—If Democrats Win

Appended to his statement was a copy of the one issued three months earlier by Wallace, in which the Cabinet member deprecated rumors of discord between Davis and himself, praising his brother Iowan as one for whom "I have a deep affection . . . and the sincerest respect for his ability and integrity."

This incident is revived here not only because it illustrates one of the very few times Chester Davis ever gave circulation to a peeve but for the recent turn of events which has made Wallace the 1940 running mate of President Roosevelt. A Democratic victory in November would make Davis a likely choice as the next Secretary of Agriculture.

"With pixies, elves, fawns and Peter Pans of the New Deal all about him, kicking up their heels to glad, mad tunes," it was written of Davis during his incumbency as triple-A administrator. "round-headed, owl-eyed Mr. Davis plugs along the path that he has marked out for himself, trudging resolutely to his goal."

The New Deal has subsided somewhat since those lines were written in the palpitating days of 1935, but Davis is still "trudging resolutely to his goal," which would be the protection of agriculture's interests as a Federal Reserve governor and the utilization of its resources, human and material, to best advantage as a national defense coordinator.

Born in Dallas County, Iowa, 52 years ago, he was educated at Grinnell and Clemson Colleges and started out as a farm journal reporter. From 1917 to 1921 he edited and managed the Montana Farmer, spent the next four years as that State's first commissioner of agriculture and labor.

Next he moved to Chicago as grain marketing director for the Illinois Agricultural Association. With several associates he launched a commercial enterprise for making artificial board out of cornstalks, but that project was knocked off by the depression. He came to Washington in May, 1933, as the AAA director of production and succeeded George Peek as administrator seven months later. On June 25, 1936, one day after his resignation from the Agricultural post became effective, he took office as a member of the Federal Reserve's board of governors.

He was one of the first farm leaders to come out for Roosevelt in 1932. Four years earlier he had bolted the Republican Party when Frank Lowden failed to get the Presidential nomination. Davis' right-hand man on the defense commission is Paul Porter, a lawyer, who was his executive assistant in AAA days.

Leon Henderson entered Government service, via the New Deal, because he was—and is—a "no-man;" not perverse, but a dauntless champion in behalf of what he believes to be the right, no matter who might be contesting his views. It was in 1933, when Gen. Hugh S. Johnson was jockey for the Blue Eagle and Henderson was director of a division of the Russell Sage Foundation. He came down and told the general what he thought of some NRA policies, particularly those relating to consumers, and was immediately drafted as an economic adviser. Shortly thereafter he was elevated to director of the research and planning division.

When the Supreme Court slew the Blue Eagle, Henderson went over to the Senate Committee on Manufactures as its economic adviser. Accepted by now as an Administration stalwart, he was retained as "consulting economist' to the Democratic National Campaign Committee in 1936, and when Roosevelt was reelected Henderson went over to WPA to serve in the same capacity.

In July, 1938, he was named executive secretary of the Temporary National Economic Committee, holding that post until his promotion to the Securities and Exchange Commission in the spring of last year to fill a vacancy caused by appointment of William O. Douglas to the Supreme Court. His term as a SEC member ends in May, 1944.

As head of the defense commission's division of price stabilization, his main effort is being directed toward determination of the effects of the rearmament program on the Nation's price structure.

A central bureau of research and statistics, directed by Stacy May, a staff member, acts as a clearing house for information required by all seven divisions of the defense body. A great part of this data is concerned with determination of materials and facilities needed by the military and the nature of national resources available to fill both military and nonmilitary requirements.

In his report last week to President Roosevelt, Henderson said:

"Analysis of both the materials and resources has been coupled with consideration of measures for control and price stabilization. Numerous proposals for price regulation are being studied. With Donald Nelson, coordinator of defense purchases, consideration is being given application of priorities from the viewpoint of their impact on prices. Surveys are also being made by this division of the economic organization and controls within the belligerent countries."

Henderson is doing most of his defense, as well as all his SEC, work from his offices at the Securities and Exchange Commission, rather than amid the elegant surroundings of the Federal Reserve Building, at present the headquarters of the Defense Advisory Commission. A bear for work, he yet manages to slip away to Wild Rose Shores, a South River retreat near Annapolis, on week-ends to frolic with the three little Hendersons or go fishing. His hook, line and sinker companions most often are Dr. Isador Lubin, of Sidney Hillman's staff on the Defense Commission, and Theodore Kreps, economist for the TNEC.

Started Life The Hard Way

Price Stabilizer Henderson is about 5 feet 8 and 200 pounds, which means he is a bit bulky. But for a back ailment he suffered a couple of years ago and which resulted in his taking time out to go to Johns Hopkins Hospital "to refurbished and have a bit of barnacle scraping in drydock," he would have worked off some of that excess poundage on golf course and in gymnasium by this time. He drives a long ball and in college (Swarthmore) was an all-'round athlete.

Henderson was born in Millville, N. J., on May 26, 1895, into an impoverished family. To keep himself in school, he began working early and, in college, he earned money in more than a dozen different ways, from minding children at nights to playing professional football under an assumed name.

When this country entered the World War Henderson enlisted as a private in the Ordnance Department and was mustered out in 1919 as a captain. Returning to Swarthmore to resume his education, he got his AB degree in 1920, and subsequently obtained an instructorship at the Wharton School of Finance.

At Carnegie Tech, his next teaching post, Henderson startled fellow faculty members by prescribing Branch Cabell, the Daily Worker and Mencken as collateral reading for his economics students.

It has been said of Leon Henderson that he is "a self-made miracle, a human encyclopedia of the social sciences."

"And," there comes an echo from his contract bridge cronies, "he's the blankety-blanketiest no-trump player you ever saw."

Slow Anger of the Dutch Flares Against Nazi Masters

Caught in Amsterdam by the German invasion of the Low Countries May 10, Beach Conger, a Herald Tribune staff correspondent, was prevented for two months from filing dispatches or leaving Holland. Now released, he gives an account of his observations and experiences.

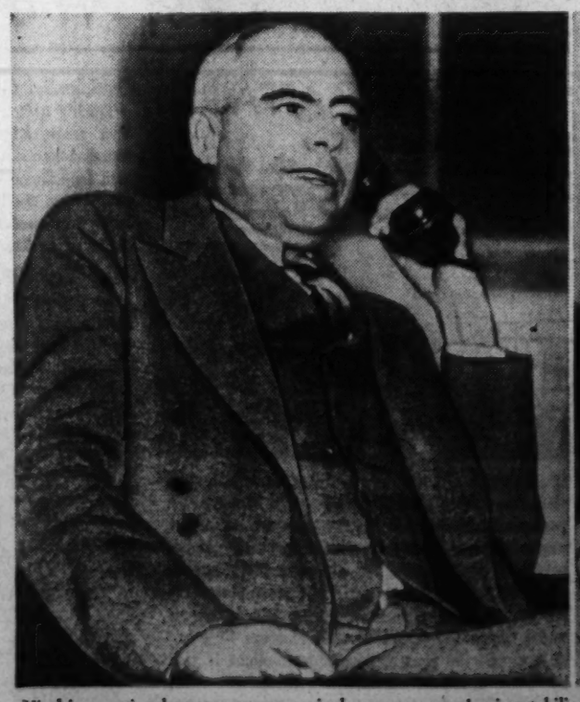
By Beach Conger

Budapest, July 20.—The firsts two months of German occupation of The Netherlands has brought about one almost national passive demonstration against the invaders and has seen a steadily growing resentment against the Nazi forces. The phlegmatic Dutchman, who takes his time making up his mind and who thought everything would continue normal despite the presence of German troops, is slowly coming to the conclusion that German "protection" of his neutrality is not exactly a blessing.

The demonstration against the German invaders took place Saturday, June 29, birthday of Prince Bernhard, husband of Princess Juliana. The young prince had worn a white carnation in his buttonhole on almost all public occasions, and two days before the anniversary Dutchmen began whispering to each other, "Don't forget to wear a white carnation on Saturday." The suggestion spread like wildfire and Saturday morning there were few persons who were not wearing either white carnations or orange-colored flowers as symbols of the ruling house of Orange.

Many of these crowds went to the royal palaces in The Hague and in Amsterdam, where they dropped orange flowers as a token of their resentment against the German invasion—not of loyalty to Queen Wilhelmina, who had fled. Occasionally Dutch Nazis trampled on the flowers, which resulted in a few street fights. Apparently the German military authorities became so alarmed over the situation that they ordered all cafes, restaurants and motion picture houses in the center of Amsterdam closed at 8 o'clock—and this on a Saturday night. Soon, however, it appeared that the police would be able to handle the situation and the curfew was canceled.

Although Americans might naturally assume that there would be an immediate resentment against any occupation by hostile soldiers that was not quite the case in Holland. While its constitutional democracy is opposed to Nazi Germany, it is tied by linguistic, racial and economic bonds to the German people. When the invasion of Holland began, to be followed quickly by the capitulation of the much weaker Dutch forces, the average Dutchman, according to conversations I had with many of them in the last two months, must have said to himself: "Germany invaded Holland on the flimsiest of pretexts—that Allied forces were about to occupy Holland. That is what the Allies should have done, but they were sticking too much to the rules of the game. In any case, we know the German action was not directed against us, but against England. Since Germany has nothing to fear from us, and having carried out this invasion under the pretext of forestalling the Allies, the Germans will be friendly toward us and everything will be all right.'



Vital in a national emergency are agriculture output and price stabilization. Recently President Roosevelt appointed two men with wide backgrounds in their respective fields to supervise these activities under the U. S. defense program. They are plump Leon Henderson (right), a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and gray-haired Chester C. Davis, former AAA administrator and now a governor of the Federal Reserve Board

U. S. Expanding West Coast Defenses to Resist Any Attack on America by Coalition of Powers

Army and Navy High Commands Realize Danger of Vulnerable Pacific; Many Millions to Be Spent

(This is the third of a series of articles on the defenses of the Pacific, written by Mr. Norris after a tour of Alaska and the West Coast as the guest of Pan American Airways.)

By John G. Norris

The average American, suddenly become defense-minded, keeps his eyes eastward and worries about the adequacy of protection against attack from Europe. In the plans of the Army and Navy high command, however, efforts to strengthen our Pacific defenses occupy equal if not greater attention.

War, if it comes to America, may well be in both the Atlantic and Pacific against a coalition of powers, and the broad western ocean contains a number of vulnerable points. The fleet and air force would be our first line of defense, but warships and warplanes cannot operate without bases, and many millions must be spent on the West Coast and outlying islands before base facilities are reasonably complete.

These might be divided into four categories for purposes of discussion. First, are the mid-Pacific advance bases, or "listening posts" as Admiral William D. Leahy, former naval operations chief, dubbed them. They are small air stations on the tiny Pacific isles of Wake, Midway, Johnston and Canton from which long-range patrol planes would operate, covering wide areas of ocean to give warning of the approach of an enemy fleet.

Mid-Pacific Bases Far From Completed

None would be strongly defended as they are too small and ill-suited for fortifications. Guam, westernmost of the islands would make an admirable fortified naval and air base, but Congress has several times registered its disapproval of the project.

Work on the mid-Pacific air bases has been under way for more than a year, supplementing previous development by Pan American Airways, which uses the islands as stopping points on its transpacific service. They will not be complete for many months, although limited naval plane operations are now carried on from their lagoons.

In a second group might be placed the new Alaskan bases, which were discussed in a previous article in this series. Protecting the United States from a flank attack, they are also "advance guards," but the installations at Dutch Harbor, Kodiak, Sitka, Anchorage and Fairbanks, will be much more extensive than the mid-Pacific bases, and will be strongly defended.

Key to the whole Pacific picture are the Hawaiian Islands, with the big naval operating and repair base at Pearl Harbor, major Army and Navy air stations, and strong fixed and mobile Army defenses. The fortified islands enable the fleet to operate for long periods far from the mainland, and should the fleet be in the Atlantic or destroyed, they would prevent any attack on the Pacific Coast.

No enemy fleet commander would attempt to by-pass Hawaii, with its submarines and planes to harass his lines of communications. Its strength, therefore, is a matter of vital concern and even during the lean 1930s, millions were poured into the islands by the Army and Navy to make them invincible. Ranking officials declare the base to be in "pretty fair shape" today, although additional money will be spent there under the emergency program.

Bulk of Millions For Coast Bases

Back of these three groups of outlying bases are the mainland establishments themselves, and it is into these that Uncle Sam is pouring the bulk of the millions earmarked for stronger Pacific defense. To San Pedro—San Diego, San Francisco Bay and Puget Sound, the fleet must return in time for fuel, supplies and overhaul. In case of a major naval battle, the bulk of the ships damaged would have to limp into West Coast navy yards and drydocks for repairs.

And if the other lines of defense fail, the protection of the United States would fall back on shore based airplanes from six major West Coast bases, submarines and patrol craft operating offshore, Army coastal guns and soldiers.

The Navy has three major, though incomplete, bases on the West Coast. Each has a major air base, some repair and supply facilities, and adequate protected anchorage for the entire fleet.

In the north, there is Puget Sound, well protected against naval attack by virtue of its long distance to the sea and five coast defense forts flanking the inner entrance to the sound. Long-range guns, firing from 12 to 16-inch shells, provide the teeth of the establishments—Forts Worden, Casey, Flagler, Townsend, and Whitman. Only the first named has an active garrison, but the others would be manned on short notice by well-trained national guardsmen.

Nearly opposite Seattle on the western bank of the sound is the Bremerton Navy Yard, main ship repair establishment of the West Coast. Fourteen warships were in for overhaul when the writer visited the establishment recently, including two battleships and two cruisers. While primarily a repair rather than a building yard, two destroyers are under construction and two tugs were recently completed.

Officials said that nearly 8,000 men were at work in the yard, nearly double the normal pay roll. Part of the force was working overtime, but it was estimated that in a war emergency the yard could handle double the number of ships it now handles. Five million dollars is to be spent on expansion of the yard and the nearby torpedo station at Keyport, during the coming year.

Just north of Seattle, on Lake Washington is the Sand Point naval air station. It is now a major air base, but is to be further enlarged under a $4,250,000 appropriation for next year. In time of war, three or four auxiliary fields would be established along the coast and another up the sound near Port Angeles to supplement the Seattle base.

Near the southern end of the sound is the principal Army base of the Northwest, Fort Lewis, headquarters of the Third Division, and a short distance from the latter is McChord Field. This is a major Army air base, put into service July 3, housing the Seventeenth bombardment group.

Guarding the mouth of the Columbia River are three coast defense posts, Forts Stevens, Canby and Columbia. Just inside the river mouth is the new naval air station at Tongue Point, Oreg., which is under construction. Vancouver Barracks is close by, which is part of the Third Division.

Government Has Purchased Additional Dry Docks

The San Francisco Bay region and Southern California have been rivals for years in every form of activity and this same spirit seems prevalent in defense preparations. Under millions of dollars appropriated by Congress major naval operating bases are being rushed to completion in both areas.

Construction of a $12,000,000 naval supply depot is getting started at Oakland, close to the new naval air station at Alameda, which is to be further expanded under a $10,500,000 outlay of the present Congress. Across and up the bay is the Mare Island Navy Yard, which has facilities for major repairs of cruisers, destroyers and smaller warships.

Mare Island has never been expanded to handle battleships because the channel approaching it is too narrow and shallow for them to operate safely. The yard is full of smaller craft, however, with 25 vessels undergoing conversion or repair. It is operating on two eight-hour shifts, with a total force of 9,000 men, some 4,000 above normal.

Rather than dredge the channel and put in larger ways at the yard so that dreadnaught repairs can be handled in San Francisco Bay, the Navy has purchased the Hunters Point drydock from the Bethlehem Co. For the time being the company will continue to operate the dock under lease, painting and cleaning the larger warships, but later it is expected that full battleship repair facilities will be installed.

Guarding the Golden Gate are six coast defense posts, Forts Winfield Scott, Baker, Barry, Cronkhite, Funston and Miley. Near the bay entrance is also the Presidio of San Francisco, headquarters of Lieut. Gen. John L. DeWitt, Army commander for the whole West Coast.

Benicia Arsenal is across the bay, while three major Army Air Corps fields are close by. There is Hamilton Field, at which is part of the first wing of the general headquarters air force; McClellan Field, the new air depot at Sacramento, and Moffett Field, former home of the Navy's dirigibles, which will be the West Coast training center for the expanding Air Corps.

Three commercial schools give the preliminary training for the Moffett Field students, while an advance training base is to be established in the San Joaquin Valley.

The principal California Army center, however, will not be around San Francisco Bay. The new Seventh Division is being organized at Camp Ord at Monterey, farther south. Also at the little coastal town is a Cavalry post, the Presidio of Monterey.

San Diego, the main naval operating base of the West Coast for many years, has a supply depot, a large naval air station, a training station, destroyer base, and a big Marine Corps base. There have been practically no repair facilities other than a floating drydock, which can handle destroyers and submarines.

Under a $10,000,000 appropriation just made by Congress, however, extensive improvements are to be made at San Diego, including the construction of a dock large enough to handle cruisers.

The larger ships of the fleet have usually based at San Pedro, 90 miles north of San Diego. Other than a few docks and a small air station, the naval facilities there have consisted of the large protected anchorage. The Navy, now, however, intends to put in an operating base at San Pedro, and will spend $19,750,000 on it during the coming year.

An Army coast defense post, Fort Rosecrans, guards San Diego Harbor, but the only major Army installations in Southern California are Fort McArthur at Los Angeles, and March Field, 50 miles east of the city.

MacArthur houses a mobile anti-aircraft regiment as well as fixed coastal guns. March Field is the headquarters of the first wing, general headquarters air force. Nearby is Mojave Desert bombing range.

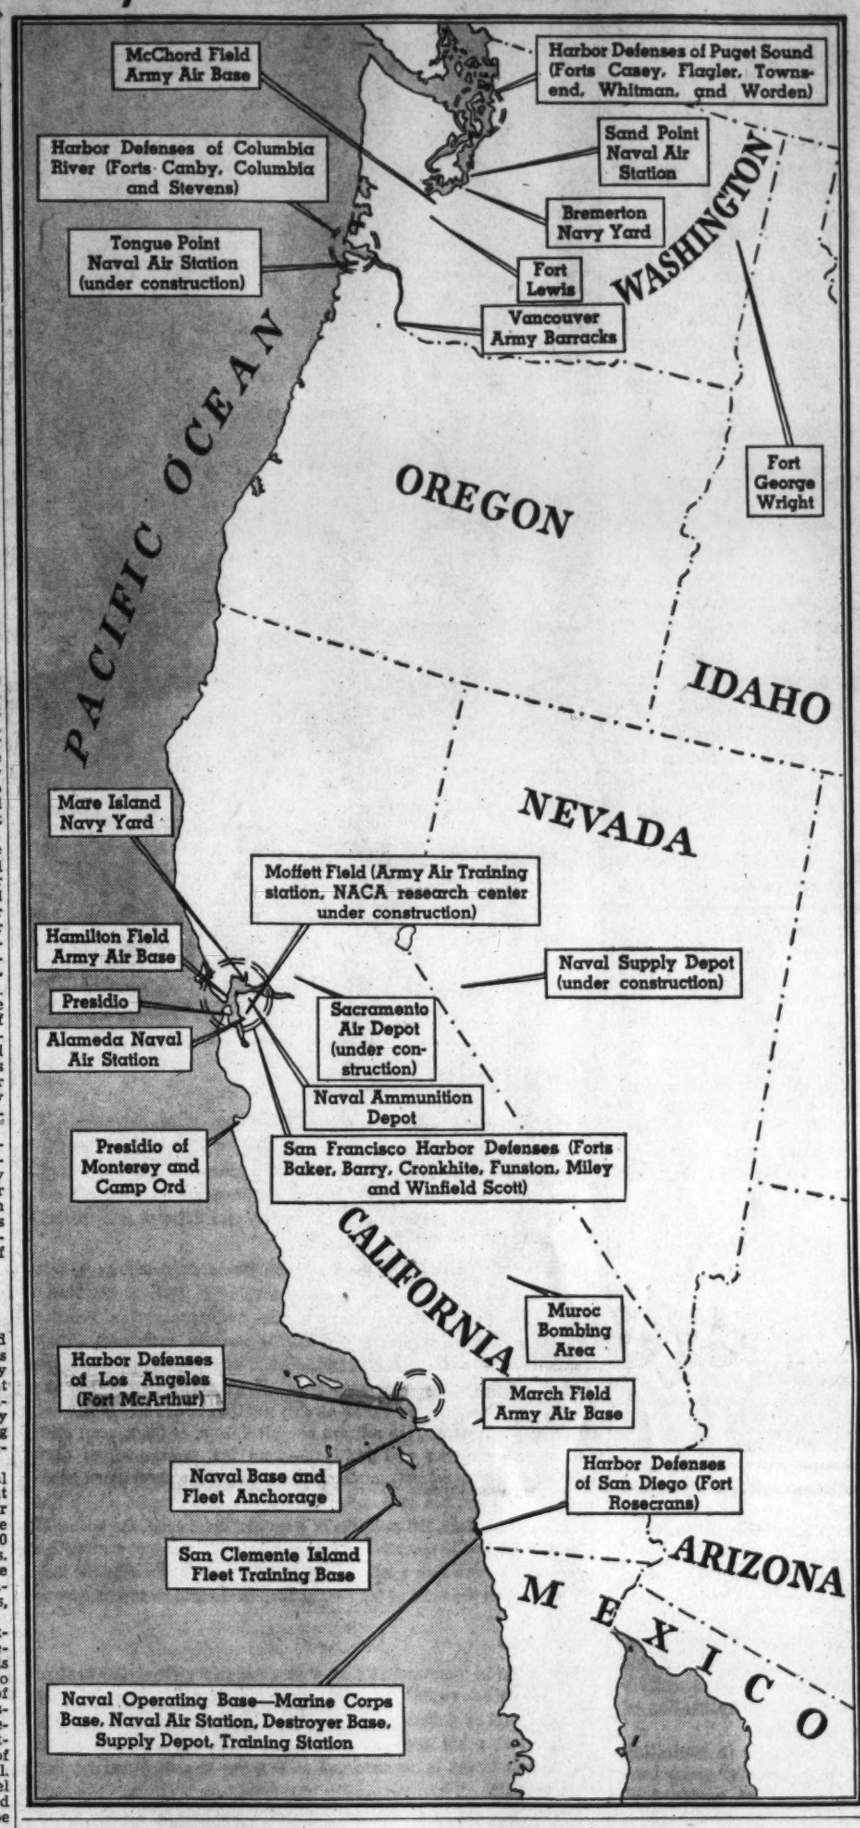
Military officials are convinced that the coast defense forts, now undergoing modernization, should be able, with mines, patrol craft, submarines and submarine nets, to prevent attacking naval forces from entering any of the principal harbors of the West Coast.

Should the fleet be engaged in the Atlantic or destroyed, and Hawaii and the advance bases reduced, a successful landing might be possible along any of the unprotected California beaches, however. To stand off such an attack, there are, or soon will be, two streamlined Regular Army divisions on the West Coast, able to speed along the good West Coast roads to any danger spot in a few hours.

To support them, there are some 8-inch and 16-inch railway guns, and two divisions of National Guardsmen. Other Regular divisions, including the two new armored units, could be brought from other points in the country in a week.

A great many more antiaircraft guns and planes must also be stationed at strategic points on the West Coast, officials hold.

And while an invasion of the Pacific Coast is perhaps the last thing to be expected in this surprising world, more troops of all types, including new tank units, probably will be stationed there later as the Nation's small Army expands under the preparedness program to more respectable size.



The Pacific side of the United States bristles with strategically set Army and Navy bases (see map). At Bremerton (top), on Puget Sound, the Navy Department has a large yard to care for aircraft carriers and battleships, along with smaller naval craft. From San Diego, a fleet air base, operate the Navy's scouting planes (center), which can patrol the coastal area. The Army's 14-inch railway rifles (above) at San Diego, Calif., can hurl 1,400-pound projectiles 15 miles to sea.

Observer Forecasts Imminent Shake-up in French Government

By Sonia Tomara.

(Sonia Tomara, of the staff of the New York Herald Tribune, who returned here Friday after passing a year covering news events in Germany, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, the Balkans, the Near East and France, discusses in this article the crisis in France.)

"It is not out of the question that Henry, Count of Paris, will restore monarchy in France."

New York, July 20.—Marshal Henri Petain's dictatorial government which is ruling France from Vichy today is not likely to remain at power for a long time. French people have bowed before it in a moment of emergency. Observers who have been in France recently believe, however, that new drastic changes will come in France before long, and that new men will take power in their hands.

Who they will be it is still difficult to say. It is possible that a French Hitler, disgusted with France's unglorious defeat may emerge in the near future. It is not out of the question, on the other hand, that Henry Count of Paris, pretender to the French throne, will restore monarchy in France and come forth as a crowned dictator of a Fascist French cooperative state.

One thing is, in any case, certain to those who have, like myself, lived in France during the days of defeat. France will not go back, for a long time to come, to the parliamentarian democratic regime of the Third Republic. Democracy as it is known in America has virtually been buried on the whole European continent.

The many French people to whom I talked in the last month of the war all realized that Hitler's strong regime, bent on conquest, had made Germany infinitely more powerful than France. The majority attributed France's weakness to her form of party government and to the inefficiency of the men at power.

Some of the more thoughtful Frenchmen expressed their fear that the reason of the French defeat lay deeper than in the faults of the regime. They wondered, in the course of conversation, whether France had not definitely lost her vitality and fighting spirit and was not declining while the German people were rising to supremacy in Germany.

"We Lack Spirit. We Are too Soft"

I remember this thought put into words by my hairdresser in Paris, a very typical representative of the average Frenchman.

"I know why we are defeated," he said. "We lack the 'spirit,' we are too soft. The nine months of my soldiership have been wasted for me and for France. We were sent north to fortify the Belgian border. But nobody did any work. Our only thought was to skip it. We dug when the officer came, but the rest of the time we smoked and talked. Meanwhile the Boches had the 'spirit' all right."

A friend of mine, who worked as an engineer in an aviation factory, expressed the same idea when he told me that they could have produced ten times more planes in their plant during the winter months, if everybody had done his utmost. The production had increased since the German advance in May, he added, but all felt that it was too late.

Meanwhile, reports spread in France about the fanatical fighting spirit of the young German pilots. I spoke to a French priest who had tried to comfort a wounded German pilot who lay dying in the garden of a country estate. The priest walked to him under a bombardment and asked the German, who was a mere boy, to what faith he belonged.

"The Fuehrer is my faith," the boy answered. "I don't want anything from your church. But if you want to be good to me get my Fuehrer's picture out of my breast pocket." The priest did so. The boy's eyes shone with joy. He pressed his lips on the postcard and murmured: "My Fuehrer, I am happy to die for you."

French Ponder German Valor

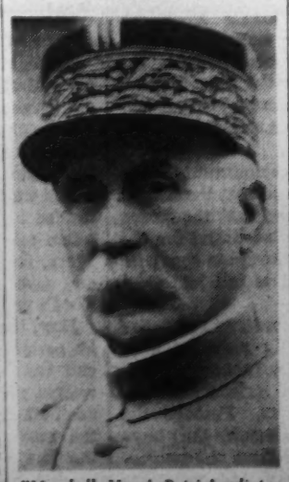
Such stories made French people think. They had heard from the French papers about heroic deeds of French pilots and tank engineers. But they had begun to lose confidence in themselves as the German troops broke through all their lines, advanced at every point they chose to attack. The average Frenchman sought of course to make someone responsible for the inefficiency of the defense. It was easy to blame the "politicians," who, it was currently said, had placed their party's interests above those of the country as a whole.

The lightning defeat of the French army which the French, like other people, had been used to consider as the world's best army, came as a crushing shock to everybody in France. The French were so stunned by the rout of the troops that the armistice came to many of them as merely the end of a horrible nightmare. I shall never forget that fateful day in Bordeaux when Marshal Petain spoke on the radio in the middle of a thunderstorm.

There was no thought of rebellion against a decision taken by an old military hero. The taking over of power by Petain was met, at the time, almost with relief. On the strength of all the talks I had with French people during the days of the debacle, I could well imagine the passive acceptance of a dictatorial government, even a certain relief of a number of people at being governed by a stronger hand.

Yet it is hard to believe that the French would put any real confidence in a man like Pierre Laval, known to have been a "politician" like the others. And as Petain is very old and could hardly be much more than a figurehead, it is logical to conclude that the present setup in France would only be a transition government.

A return of monarchy in France might have seemed impossible only a few weeks ago. But the return of the Bourbons to France is no longer out of the question since the French people have lost confidence in their own Third Republic, in their own military virtues and in their leading role in France. There is in France today a still vague desire for renaissance, for moral and political cleanliness, for a greater spirit of self-sacrifice. If no other young leaders appear on the scene in the coming months, which are bound to be a time of great stress and suffering, it is possible that the eyes of young Frenchmen will turn again to the descendant of kings.



"Marshall Henri Petain's dictatorial government is not likely to remain in power for a long time."

The Federal Diary

Take a Number, Please—

By Edward Ryan

The timhe is in the offing, or maybe a little later, when top Government officials will be using all their drag to get a low identification number—the way tinfluential citizens now try for low-number automobile tags.

The number of Government officials who may consider themselves "top" is likely to be 5,000, according to highly competent estimates.

This dire potential trend is an offshoot of the new program for putting the records of some 750,000 Government employes on punch cards to speed up the Civil Service Commission's personnel processes.

What's going to happen, in part, is this:

Every one of the 750,000 Government employes is going to have a number. And the commission officials charged with setting up the punchlard system are already planning to leave plenty of room for the executives who will want a low or possibly "honorary" number.

No one, a check-up at the Civil Service Commission disclosed, is yet slated to get No. 1.

No. 1 in the punch-card file of Government employes is going to be held aside for the President, if he wants it.

Lowest number that any rank and file employe will be able to claim is No. 5100. Highest number will be between 75000000 and 100000000.

Among the problems which are being studied in connection with the numbering and punching program are these:

Plenty of room should be left for those who might want low numbers and be able to collect them. This means that about 5,000 digits are likely to be held aside at the beginning of the list.

Next, on the first tabulation, 100 units will be left between each name, to give room for new employes coming into the service. This will keep the original system workable for many years. Thus, the numbers will run 5100, 5200, 5300 and so on to 75000000 or higher.

The numbers will rise in order of the alphabet, so that cards can be sorted on the basis of the employe numbers, and the employes would automatically be listed alphabetically.

Officials are planning to be on the lookout for fancy name changes that would bring into the Federal service the same wild competition for first and last place on the lists that has bothered compilers of telephone directories.

A total of $13,500,000 has been "recaptured" by the United States Housing Authority from funds earmarked for local communities and turned over to defense projects, officials reported.

The funds, it was explained, were taken away from local authorities who were slow to use the money earmarked for them months ago, and they will be used in development of eight defense housing projects.

USHA officials added that they were exploring more possibilities for additional funds to meet a flood of requests for defense projects. Among the housing projects already started are those at the Montgomery, Ala., Army base and the Pensacola, Fla., Navy base. More than 150 other communities have asked USHA aid in building homes for Army and Navy personnel and for civilians employed in defense industries.

An emergency demand for radio operators has opened the way for a number of temporary appointments to the jobs in the Federal Communications Commission, officials reported.

The FCC announced that it will take applications from licensed commercial operators and amateurs for appointment as radio operators in the field service, with the understanding that those employed will be given 90-day assignments and examined during that time by the Civil Service Commission.

The jobs pay $1,800 for holders of first-class radiotelegraph licenses and $1,620 for second-class license holders. Amateurs who qualify will be eligible for the $1,620 jobs.

Besides the radio operator exam, the Civil Service Commission has announced opening of new competition for these positions:

Packer and crater, $4.32 to $6.72 a day; senior packer, $1,320 a year; senior tool and die maker, $2,000 a year, and airplane and engine mechanic, $1,800 a year, for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, Langley Field, Va.; machinist, $7.48 to $8.44 a day at the United States Naval Powder Factory, Indianhead, Md.

Suffer Little Children

Neither from Germany nor any other country has there come any statement to discourage belief that it is wholly feasible to give large numbers of English children temporary shelter in America, if transport can be found. There is no problem on this side of the Atlantic regarding the care of these children. A Gallup poll indicates that American homes would be open to at least 5,000,000 of the small refugees. The Department of State is prepared to grant visas for all whose relatives can show evidence that they will be cared for over here.

Yet it has not been possible to bring more than a tiny trickle of these prospective victims of war to the haven of a land at peace. In the House of Commons last week it was explained that plans for evacuation had been deferred because England cannot spare warships for convoy. It was recalled that the Arandora Star, carrying German and Italian prisoners to Canada, was nonetheless torpedoed. And the implication was that no better fate could be hoped for an unguarded British refugee ship.

A rising public demand in the United States points to the obvious solution. If the belligerent nations were asked to guarantee safe conduct for American vessels, pledged for this errand of mercy alone, none could oppose the request without danger of incurring a hideous stigma.

Adolf Hitler, in his speech before the Reichstag on Friday, emphasized his aversion for the suffering of children foreshadowed by the now seemingly inevitable attack on England. If Hitler is himself open to that reason for which he appeals in others, now is the Administration's chance to put the issue squarely to him.

The Nazi government could scarcely refuse to promise unimpeded passage in American ships for the jeopardized English children, nor can this country refuse to ask for the assurances which would release our ships to fulfill a simple obligation of humanity.

Bolivian Tin

The countries of South America possess very few noncompetitive products which the United States needs and is willing to purchase in large quantities. This explains why plans for strengthening our trading ties with the Latin-American republics are so difficult to translate into concrete proposals. But there is one suggestion now being studied by the National Defense Commission which offers very promising possibilities of cooperation. That is the plan for utilizing Bolivian tin ores.

There is no assurance that the tin supplies of the Straits Settlements and the Dutch East Indies, upon which we now depend, will always be available. As a precautionary measure, therefore, it seems desirable to promote the development of Bolivia's ore. Bolivia, too, would no doubt be glad to be assured of an alternative export outlet for her tin in this hemisphere in case shipments to Great Britain were interrupted.

Hence the basis for a satisfactory trading arrangement exists, even though it might not appeal either to buyer or seller if the world were at peace and freed from threats of war.

A number of complications stand in the way of our utilization of Bolivian ores. It would be necessary to construct smelters to process such ores in this country. And the cost of operations would doubtless be considerably higher in this country than abroad. But higher production costs would not be much of an argument against setting up the smelters if thereby we could materially strengthen our emergency defense system.

How much should be spent for such purposes over and above the amount needed to supply our tin requirements through regular channels would be a matter for determination by experts acquainted with our defense needs and the vulnerability of our supply lines. It would also depend, of course, upon the terms of any Bolivian offer.

At any rate this tin proposal is worthy of all the attention it is now receiving. If a workable plan should eventually emerge, it would, no doubt, stimulate the search for other feasible and mutually beneficial trading arrangements between this country and Latin America.

Mr. Farley Walks Out

President Roosevelt won almost everything he sought at Chicago—except the continued service of James A. Farley as his campaign manager. A majority of the delegates grudgingly bowed to his wish to have Secretary of Agriculture Wallace as a running mate. But the man who directed the successful Democratic campaigns of 1932 and 1936 has resigned his post in spite of protests from both the President and the delegates at Chicago.

Mr. Farley offers a thoroughly reasonable explanation of his desire to retire to private life. He has had to make financial sacrifices to remain Postmaster General and chairman of the Democratic National Committee. Undoubtedly he is eager to accept the "attractive offer in business" which, he says, is open to him. But that eagerness has become dominant in his mind only because of his unwillingness to conduct a third-term campaign for Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. Farley probably could have increased his income by entering private business several years ago. Yet he remained in office. His candidacy for both the Presidency and the Vice Presidency before the Chicago Convention is ample evidence that he was willing to make further financial sacrifice to remain in public life. His failure to obtain either nomination greatly influenced his decision to retire from party and public office. But the fact that he is stepping out before the Presidential campaigns get under way, instead of waiting until November, can be interpreted in only one way.

Mr. Farley has pledged his support to the Roosevelt-Wallace ticket. This pledge apparently means, however, only that the political wizard will not bolt his party on the third-term issue, as Senator Burke and a number of other influential Democrats have already done.

It would be useless to pretend that this resignation is not a severe blow to the Roosevelt-Wallace ticket. Mr. Farley's opposition to the third-term movement is common knowledge. Yet if he had submerged that opposition after the convention was over, his example would doubtless have encouraged many other Democratic leaders to do likewise. For Mr. Farley has an ardent following within the party he has faithfully served. His continued hostility to Mr. Roosevelt's third-term effort can only strengthen the hand of the bolters.

The November election may thus be a more clear-cut test of the New Deal than the country has yet seen. In both 1932 and 1936 a vast number of Jeffersonian Democrats followed Mr. Roosevelt, despite misgivings, because of their party affiliations. Now an ardent New Dealer has replaced conservative Vice President Garner in second place on the ticket, and the President must rely more heavily upon the politically-inexperienced inner circle of his Administration for the conduct of his campaign.

No one realizes more keenly than Mr. Farley the fact that he has put the Administration under a real handicap at the beginning of the Presidential race. Yet he has calmly and deliberately washed his hands of the 1940 campaign because of convictions that he shares with many other Democrats.

Monetary Controls

The joint statement issued by Secretary Morgenthau and Sir Frederick Phillips, British undersecretary of the treasury, declares that Great Britain "plans to return to liberal monetary and trade policies as soon as possible after hostilities cease." Gratifying though this declaration may be to American ears, it is an expression of a wish rather than a statement of fixed policy. For the postwar world may find itself confronted by insurmountable obstacles to restoration of free systems of exchange and free movement of goods.

At present the exigencies of war have forced Great Britain to set up exchange controls which are steadily becoming more rigid and comprehensive. Indeed, the Morgenthau-Phillips announcement indicates that the British have sought and obtained closer American cooperation in plans for extending the area of official exchange control, with a view to stabilizing sterling rates.

Sir Frederick subsequently explained that maintenance of fixed official rates for the pound would protect American exporters in world markets from the competition of British exporters accepting payment in depreciated pounds. On the other hand, the British hope that the new system of registered sterling accounts will enable them to increase their own dollar balances.

While no official commitments have been made, it is assumed that the British also received assurances that the frozen assets held in the United States for the nationals of invaded European countries will not be permitted to fall into German hands.

Britain's efforts to conserve her dollar balances by drastically reducing purchases of commodities not needed for war purposes have created serious problems for American exporters. Perhaps the British were urged to diversify their buying here in order to relieve the congestion of unsold surpluses. It is hardly to be expected that they will buy from us more than is absolutely necessary. But they may be induced to shift some purchasing from other markets.

The British authorities have already been compelled to sell American securities belonging to their nationals to replenish the dollar balances needed to pay for American goods. The longer the war lasts, the more deeply they will have to dig into these capital reserves. If they should be wholly or even largely liquidated, the British would be confronted by very difficult exchange problems with the restoration of peace. For heretofore they have depended upon the interest and dividends from overseas investments to pay for their normally heavy excess of imports.

Lacking these resources, conditions in Great Britain would resemble those which have compelled so many nations to resort to rigid control of their exchanges in order to adjust their external commitments to their means of payment. Under such circumstances, the promised return to the liberal monetary and trading policies of the past would undoubtedly have to be indefinitely deferred.

The President Signs

President Roosevelt has affixed his signature to the bill extending the provisions of the original Hatch Act to State and local governmental employes paid in part from Federal funds

While the prohibitions of the Hatch Acts handicap professional politicians regardless of their partisan affiliations, it is the Democratic Party which is chiefly affected by the removal from the political arena of hundreds of thousands of New Deal officeholders owing their jobs to patronage. The strong opposition of Democratic Congressmen to the measure just signed by the President and the united Republican support accorded it in the House testify to that fact.

For the President to approve legislation of this type in an election year required courage and a willingness to make personal sacrifices in the interest of clean politics. To be sure, legislation alone will not protect Government workers from political exploitation. But the circumstances under which the Hatch bills were enacted into law indicates that the Administration intends to do its utmost to see that they are effectively enforced.

Wisdom In Candor

"There is no wisdom," Benjamin Disraeli used to say, "like frankness:" Wendell Willkie may or may not have pondered the advice of this shrewd British statesman. But, in any event, he seems to set great store upon candor in a political contest.

President Roosevelt had given Mr. Willkie an opportunity to make the most of his flair for frankness. During the latter half of the Democratic National Convention the Chief Executive tried diligently to create the impression that he did not wish to run again but could not reject a call to service of the Nation. Regardless of what may have been the promptings of the President's conscience, a great many citizens believe that his unquestioned devotion to the public welfare is not a complete explanation of his third-term candidacy.

Mr. Willkie lost no time in exploiting the President's lack of candor to his own advantage. He makes no pretense of sacrificing himself for the public good. He wants to be President. As a man of many convictions, he is eager to present his ideas to the public in a national campaign and to lay his plans before Congress if he is elected.

Many opponents as well as friends of Mr. Willkie will find this candor refreshing. It may prove also to be good politics. For a candidate who frankly admits his ambition for high office disarms a substantial number of critics in advance. Mr. Willkie could have made good use of the words of J. R. Lowell:

> I blurt ungrateful truths, if so they be,
> That none may need to say them after me.

The law of supply and demand, as applicable to home economics in many cases: He supplies a dollar and she demands another.

In a way, it's your own fault. When you take your car to a service station for lubrication, you tell the attendant to "grease it all over."

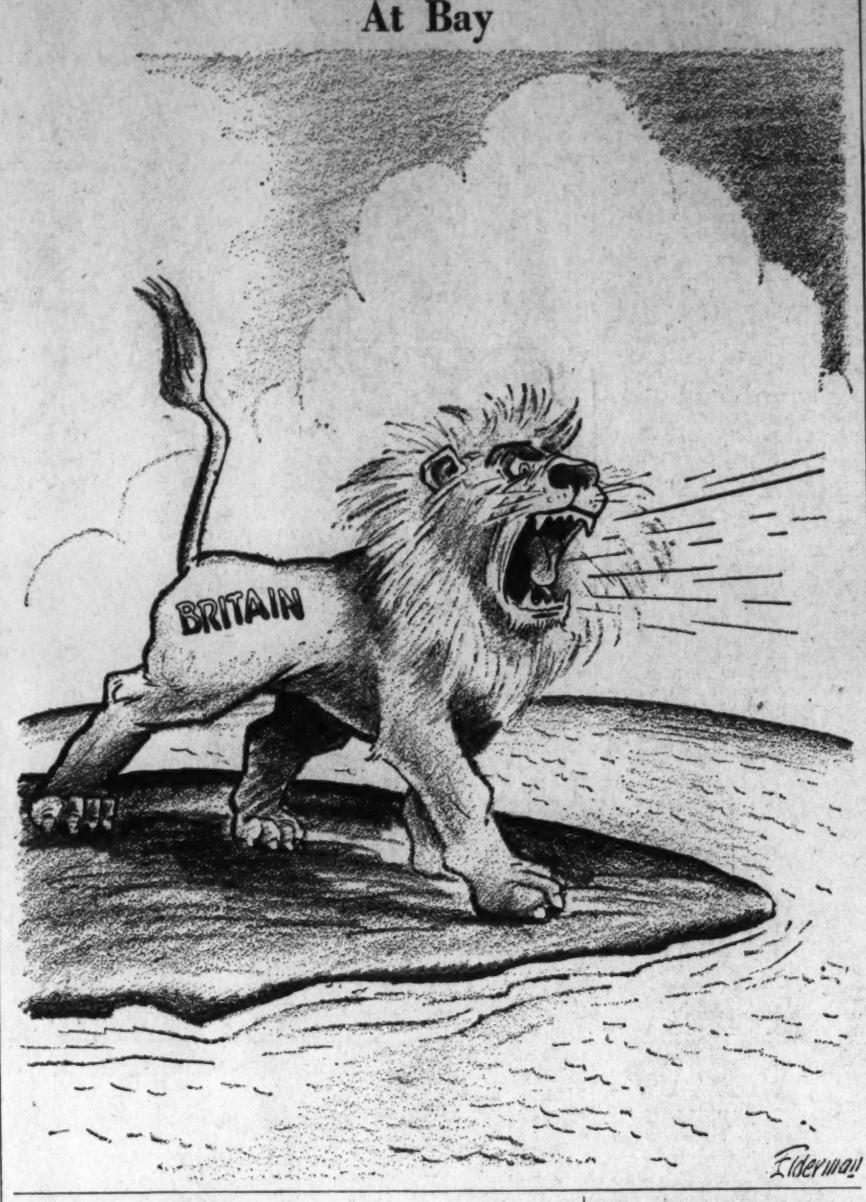
Wolves Can't Take It

From the Memphis Commercial Appeal

Radio, it is revealed by a visitor down from Alaska, is now performing a splendid service of protection for the hardy sourdoughs who go prospecting around the tall and uncut. In days of yore, the sly, slinking, cruel, bloodthirsty wolves would wait until the lonely wayfarer had bedded himself down for the night and fallen asleep. Then, with cunning savagery, the wolves would pounce on him and give him what Little Red Riding Hood's grandma got that time.

Now, though, the prospector hauls out his portable radio, tunes in a swing band, and rests in utter ease of mind. The wolves, no matter how ravenous, simply can't take it and won't stay anywhere in the same neighborhood. Maybe, from the howls and gibberings, the wolves think the sourdough has a superwolf of his own. If they do, we don't wonder, anyhow.

At Bay



Repatriation

". . . In the evening the Frenchmen dined with us. In consequence of the numerous company we sat farther apart than usual, and as the Parisian guests generally did not talk loud the conversation yielded little matter for jotting. The general (whose name was Valden) ate little, and hardly spoke at all. Favre, too, was dejected and sparing of his words. . . ."

THAT THE GUESTS of the Graf von Bismarck should have been somewhat low in spirits that January evening in 1871, as Dr. Moritz Busch, the foreign office underling who accompanied the Prussian Chancellor has noted in his journal, is scarcely surprising. Their thoughts, as they sat at the long table lighted with stearine candles stuck in champagne bottles, must have been far from comforting. For the French visitors—M. Jules Favre, ofreign minister of the newly hatched republic; M. Durrbach, the railroad official; Valden, of the general staff, and their secretaries and assistants—were the representatives of a crushed and defeated nation. They had come to the chancellor's headquarters in Versailles (a mansion in the Rue de Provence which had been, until the siege, the residence of a certain Mme. Jesse, the widow of a prosperous textile manufacturer) to conclude the terms of capitulation under which more than a million and a half citizens of the republic they had erected on the ruins of the Second Empire were to be turned over to Germany.

It is not to be wondered at, then, that although the chancellor kept an excellent table—supplied not merely from the ordinary commissary, but by daily gifts of delicacies sent from home—roast goose, game pasties, venison and noble sausages, together with cigars, fine wines and brandies—it is not to be wondered at that the French emissaries had little appetite.

During the course of the meal one of the guests, a certain Count d'Herisson de Saulnier, entertained his hosts with tales of dog-and-cat hunts organized in the streets by the starving citizens of Paris. At the head of the table, where Count Bismarck, in undress uniform, sat with M. Favre at his right, the conversation was upon more abstract subjects, as Col. von Berhardi, the cavalry officer detailed to accompany the French visitors, informs us. M. Favre, a bulky man in civilian clothes, with a fringe of gray whiskers framing his sallow face, was earnestly arguing the merits of representative government. Bismarck, as might be expected, upheld the superiority of the monarchic form.

Then when the meal was concluded at last, the doors were thrown open, and the two leaders repaired to the drawing room off the main entrance hall—the same room in which the negotiations for the treaties between Prussia and the South German states that led to the proclamation of the empire had been carried on. On the wall was a small map of France, stuck here and there with varicolored pins to mark the movements of the armies. Nearby, under a mirror stood a table holding an ornate clock surmounted by a great bronze demon with outstretched wings. It was here that the two affixed their signatures to the terms of capitulation—Bismark with a bejeweled pen sent him by a jeweler from Pfrozheim, in Baden, especially for the occasion.

"In three or four hours," Favre remarked dejectedly, "I also shall be numbered among the traitors."

Favre was not mistaken in his estimate of the unpopularity of the step he had taken, even though it is difficult to see what choice was left him. At any rate the reaction against the government was immediate. The Prefect of Marseilles in a bitter speech declared "I owe no obedience to the man who has capitulated to Bismarck. I know him no longer." At Bordeaux, where Gambetta, minister of war and of the interior, who had escaped from Paris in a balloon, was working furiously to organize new armies, the news was received with an explosion of anger. M. Jules Simon, who was sent to acquaint the authorities there of the terms of the surrender, tells us in his essay on the government of M. Thiers that he was subjected to the bitterest revilement. Gambetta himself, the one-eyed "Danton of the Second Republic" resigned from the ministry at once.

But the deputies from Alsace and Lorraine, claimed by the new German Empire by right of blood and language, were most heartbroken of all. In a memorial signed by all the members from the lost provinces, Keller, the deputy from Haut Rhin, assured the Assembly:

"We declare the right of Alsatians and Lorrainers to remain members of the French nation is forever inviolable. And swear, in our own name and in the name of our constituents, our children and their descendants, to uphold this right for all time and by all means, in the face of all usurpers."

Almost 50 years later that pledge was to be vindicated. Most military experts date the German downfall in the war of 1914-1918 to the smash-up of the great drive of mid-July—a smash-up that was due to the warning the French had received from a deserter who came over from the enemy lines with news of the zero hour. The man was an Alsatian, burning to do all the harm he could to the Germany which Bismarck had created.

Religion And Society

One Layman's View

Note: The following is excerpted from "Magnificent Delusion," by Fred G. Clark, published by Whittlesey House, New York.

It would be presumptuous for a layman to debate theology with the clergy, but when it moves into economic fields I believe that the layman is entitled to engage the church in controversy.

Accordingly, I wish to ask this question of that group who avowedly oppose the system of individual enterprise and proportionate reward. Do you honestly believe that the universal equality of the spirit can ever apply to the mind, the body, or the bank account?

If the answer is "yes" it contradicts what seems to me the basic value and importance of spiritual equality—namely, that every man has an inalienable right to develop himself to the limit of his individual capacity. This involves unequal rewards in money and position which, good or bad, are essential to the progress of the human race.

I hope that this will not be misconstrued as a desire to see religion function as an opiate for the sordid poverty that has always attended society and, according to the Bible, always will.

On the other hand this should be construed as a plea that religion should not be allowed to function as an auxiliary subversive force. The church can wield a mighty influence over people's thinking and that strength imposes an obligation to be sound and constructive in all its recommendations, and to develop the spiritual man who alone can survive in this material world.

On the chance that this movement within the church might be the result of a perfectly human desire to increase the stature of Christianity in our everyday life, I would like to respectfully suggest the following:

I do not believe that it is necessary for the church to actively enter the social and economic phases of our life in order to be its dominant factor. Practically all of our social and economic ills result from the spiritual weaknesses of greed, intolerance and intellectual dishonesty. It has frequently been said that if the golden rule were applied we would need no other law. That the golden rule will be the supreme law at some future time is assured through its indestructible rationality. Whether this comes as a result of many centuries of groping, stumbling, trial and error, or through a few decades of religious instruction, is, I believe, up to the church.

What greater influence could an institution desire than to be the fountainhead of all spiritual and moral inspiration? The greater always includes the lesser and the material considerations to which the church is now devoting much of its energy are palliatives rather than preventives. As I see it the church is charged with the task of eliminating the causes of human frailty. The economists, social workers and the politicians are better qualified to wrestle with the results. Addressing for the moment the economic-minded clergy, I would like to ask a question: "Which would you rather do, eliminate the cause of disease, or merely be a doctor engaged in administering routine treatment?"

Another thought suggests itself and in expressing it I wish to disclaim any desire or intention to frighten or otherwise alarm the church. The thought is this: It is historically proved that almost every recurrence of state-domination of the individual citizen has been accompanied by suppression of religious freedom, and in some cases actual destruction of the church. Current examples are found in Russia and Germany.

This creates a paradox of baffling proportions. While it is not for me to interpret what is in their minds, it certainly seems that a segment of the clergy is nurturing the proverbial viper in its bosom.

Unfortunately, ignorance of the law, either natural or man-made, will not alter the consequences.

Unlike our public schools and state colleges, the church has no obligation to the taxpaying public to support the chosen American system of private enterprise and individual reward. It is free to teach whatever, and however, it desires. It seems to me, though, that the church is assuming a responsibility of tremendous and literally awful import when it employs its prestige and immense influence for the promotion of unproved or unsound economic theories.

The upward struggle of the human race is mile-stoned with tragedy and suffering. That seems to be God's plan. But the progress of the human race has been marked by the emergence of superior intellects and stouter hearts. To these go the larger rewards and on these depends the welfare of the masses.

And that, too, seems to be God's plan.

At this point I want to express a deep conviction. Without Christian charity, and above all, Christian patience with the inevitable mistakes which democracy has made and will continue to make in its perilous course down the gantlet of reaction and radicalism, there is no hope for either America or any other so-conceived democracy.

Man must be taught to respect, to love, to forgive, and to help his fellow men.

In this teaching the church can and should take the lead, but the type of help involved is of primary importance.

Mexico After The Election

Mexico City.

EVENTS IN MEXICO in the past week have placed the United States Government on the spot. The threat of two Congresses to be installed on September 1 will pose the question of recognition, although much graver questions may have to be answered before then.

"To understand the gravity of this situation it is only necessary to realize the profound influence which Washington exercises here. Although Mexico stoutly and rightly defends her national sovereignty and dignity and insists upon recognition as an equal in all diplomatic discussions, the desire of the majority of Mexicans is for amity and peace with their neighbor to the north. Seeking this they frequently look for guidance, and always look for understanding of their problems. These problems are highly complex and to understand them is not easy.

North American correspondents covering last Sunday's elections were surprised throughout the day by the appeal which the Mexican people made to them. Again and again their cruising cars were approached by men and women who begged, "Please tell the people of the United States what you see today. Just write what you see and tell them about it. We like the United States and we want to be friends."

The correspondents wrote what they saw and they described the great popular uprising to support the candidacy of Gen. Almazan. This demonstration came from people of all classes, with the exception of government officials supporting their candidate, Gen. Avila Camacho. Even some of these officials and the great bureaucracy of civil servants here deserted the official candidate and voted for Almazan.

THE SWARMING hordes of people surging through the streets here on Sunday represented all classes and all ages and their determination to vote and fights to exercise their civic rights represented a genuine popular revolt. It was a revolt against a ruling clique which has been in power since the '20s and which in recent years has been bolstered by the radical Confederation of Mexican Labor (C. T. M.). It was not a personal revolt against Gen. Avila Camacho but against his party and all it stands for.

Most spectacular of all, this public anger was not directed against President Cardenas, head of the government under attack. President Cardenas visited the polls throughout the morning and went personally to quell the uprising occurring on Cinco de Mayo in late evening when six people were killed and seven wounded as 10,000 Almazanistas attempted to storm the National Palace. Everywhere Gen. Cardenas was greeted with "Vivas" and people imploring him to give them an honest vote and count. One Mexican editorialist commented, "They believe in him but only in him."

A TENSE four days passed after Sunday's rioting until the counting of the votes on Thursday. During this time each party had in its possession the votes cast at the polls it controlled on Sunday. Thursday morning the "official" counting stations, controlled by Avilacamachistas, were opened and the Almazanistas refused to enter them. Almazan election boards set up duplicate computing stalls to count their own votes, a procedure which the government has declared illegal.

Thursday night both parties declared their candidates the winner. The Avilacamachistas claimed a majority of 173,851 to 36,246 in the Federal District and a majority of 5 to 1 throughout the country. The Almazan party answered with a bombshell which is the most serious development yet in a situation full of dynamite.

AN INDEPENDENT Congress will be set up on September 1 and will install Gen. Almazan as the new President of Mexico, his party announced. The installation will be made by 150 of the 172 deputies which the Almanazistas claim to have elected. Figures on their tabulation of votes have not been released to date, but the party's announcement is a gauntlet thrown down to the federal government, challenging it to recognize the victory of the opposition candidate.

Since many illegalities both in voting and counting are alleged by both parties, the possibility exists that the government will declare the election null and void and seek a way out of the present impasse by appointing a provisional President. A special session of the Congress has been called for an early date and the Congress would be the body for selecting the ad interim President.

That such a solution would be accepted by the Almazan party is doubtful, since its effect would be to remove their candidate from the leadership which he feels the populace handed to him. One supposition is that if he could name the provisional President, thereby placing his party in power, he might accept such a deal. All this, however, remains in the field of conjecture as the murky political scene grows increasingly dark and confused.

Conservative Mexicans have for years accused the United States Government of denying them their rights because of its recognition of existing regimes here. This recognition has meant that an arms embargo was imposed at the border, preventing the opposition party from buying ammunition with which to combat the entrenched government forces. The answer to this is of course that our recognition has gone to whatever government the Mexicans themselves set up on the principle that Mexico's internal politics were none of our affair.

THE CONSERVATIVE and middle class forces have not since 1910 made such a popular showing as they did last Sunday. And even to describe Sunday's demonstration as conservative is inaccurate for, as stated before, it came from all classes of the people. Its very disorganization proclaimed its spontaneity as compared with the regimented groups of farmers and laborers which the administration party and the C. T. M. delivered at the polls.

Even among the farm and labor groups there were many desertions to Almazan ranks. The great showing promised by the

GEN. AVILA CAMACHO
The Almazanistas have nothing personal against him, but——

C. T. M. did not materialize and provided the second greatest political upset of the day. Current reports are that Mexican labor has abandoned the leadership of its radical spokesman, Vicente Lombardo Toledano and is on the loose, in open rebellion against the extreme leftist doctrines he has sought to implant and his dictatorial political management of his labor post.

These people today, the men and women in the street, rose up against their government and labor leadership on Sunday. Now they are asking—"What will the United States do?" A false move at this point could not only wreck United States prestige at the Havana Conference, it could precipitate civil war in Mexico. The question of recognition is one of profound gravity which may take weeks to answer. It will not be precipitated until September 1. Meanwhile the Mexican people ask for guidance and understanding.

This Upheaval

It should be apparent to all that the frightful upheaval we are witnessing in our community of nations is not at too many Americans delusively believe a mere explosion of power politics on the continent or a violent readjustment of the inequities of the Versailles Treaty. No, it is nothing less than a titanic world revolution so profound and yet so obscure that unless we are looking deeply into the matter the significance and the immediate effect may escape us with the same disastrous results attendant upon us as when a mariner loses his compass in the midst of a seething sea and a starless night.—Matthew McCullough Finn., Detroit, Mich.

Conquerors Die

Our politicians do not realize that all these proposed heavy armaments for America are really directed not against the German nation but against Hitler. We propose to spend billions of dollars not to stop the Germans but one man among the Germans, Hitler. But when Hitler dies—and he may not live long—the conquering spirit of the Germans will subside, or collapse, as the conquering spirit of the French collapsed when Napoleon died. Hitler is the sole dominating influence in Germany. Probably no conqueror like himself will arise for centuries.—Charles Hooper, San Francisco, Calif.

On Rumania

Historic Claims And Ethnical Makeup Outlined

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read an inaccurate letter regarding "Rumania's claims to all her provinces." For the information of your readers and in order to re-establish the factual situation as attested to by neutral authorities, as well as by Russian and Hungarian statistics, I wish to submit the following data:

Prof. Mosely, of Cornell University, in his article, "Is Bessarabia Next?" published in the April, 1940, issue of Foreign Affairs, states that Bessarabia, which for several centuries was a part of the principality of Moldavia, under Ottoman Suzerainty, was ceded to Russia by Turkey in 1812. In 1856, by the Treaty of Paris, the southwestern district, bordering on the Danube and the lower reaches of the Prut, were returned to Moldavia, and thus became a part of the united principality of Rumania. In 1878, following the Russian-Rumanian war against Turkey (in which be it said our troops played a decisive role), the Congress of Berlin handed these districts back to Russia over the protest of Rumania, which was forced to accept northern Dobruja in exchange. In 1917, Prof. Mosley continues, following the separation of Ukraine from Russia, the autonomy of Bessarabia was proclaimed by the Council of the Land, formed in the same manner as the Russian Soviets, by representatives of local organizations, both Rumanian and non-Rumanian. In March, 1918, the same coucil voted for the union of that province with Rumania.

As to the population of Bessarabia, according to the Russian census of 1897, the inhabitants of that province numbered about 2,000,000, out of which 47.6 per cent were Rumanians, 27.8 per cent Russians and Ukrainians, 11.8 per cent Jews, 5.3 per cent Bulgarians and 3.1 per cent Germans. In the publication of Instituto Geografico de Agostini-Novara, of Rome, entitled "L'Europa Etnico-Linguistica" (1916) it is stated on page 13 that according to the same Russian census, out of 1,121,169 Rumanians living in the Csarist empire, 920,919 inhabited Bessarabia. The Rumanian census of 1930 gives the following for that province: Rumanians 56.2 per cent, Russians and Ukrainians 23.3 per cent.

Bucovina, likewise a part of the principality of Moldavia, was ceded by Turkey to Austria in 1775. At that time the province was inhabited almost in its entirety by Rumanians. The Austrian government encouraged the settling of Germans and especially Ukrainians—who migrated from Galicia, previously acquired by the Hapsburg empire—with the expected result that the overwhelming Rumanian majority was greatly reduced. According to the 1930 census the Rumanians had only a relative majority of 54.5 per cent, while the Ukrainians accounted for 27.7 per cent.

Transylvania has not, as the letter writer alleges, been Hungarian for over 1,000 years. To quote only one Hungarian testimonial in this respect, Count Apponyi, president of the Hungarian delegation to the Paris Peace Conference, states in Note VIIII, Annex IV: "The separate state of Transylvania was constituted in the fourteenth century . . . The separate existence of Transylvania began in 1526 and came to an end in 1867. . . . The sovereignity of the national dukes of Transylvania was followed by that of the Hapsburg, based on Law XI of 1774. This law abolished the freedom of election, but maintained the separate government of Transylvania. In 1867 the country was united with Hungary. . . ." It appears clear that this province, far from constitution a part of Hungary for over 1,000 years, has been for centuries an autonomous political entity.

Regarding the assertion that the majority of Transylvania's population is overwhelmingly Hungarian, I give below the figures of the Hungarian census of 1910 for that province

Rumanians	2,800,073	(53.8%)
Hungarians	1,704,851	(28.6%)
Germans	559,824	(10.2%)
Total population	5,265,444

According to the Rumanian census the ethnical composition was as follows:

Rumanians	3,207,880	(57.8%)
Hungarians	1,353,276	(24.4%)
Germans	543,852	(9.8%)
Jews	499,099	(7. %)
Total population	6,048,540

In the whole province of Dobruja, according to the Rumanian census of 1930, the Rumanians represented 44.2 per cent of the population, the Bulgarians 22.7 per cent and the Turks 18.5 per cent. For southern Doboruja the population percentages are as follows: Rumanians 37.8 per cent, Bulgarians 20.5 per cent, Turks 34 per cent and Jews 7.7 per cent.

Excerpts From Our Letters

Our Liberty

I feel terribly distressed that so very few Americans comprehend the meanings and values of our liberty, freedom and what justice we have. The greatest alarm is American ease, fickleness and general selfish dumbness. I cannot see how anyone with any brains or judgment or reason can honestly feel or talk with any complacency about a nation or nations that have openly violated pledged words, every moral and spiritual law and murdered, robbed and stolen all in sight. Anyone who condones such as this is not fit to live in the United States of America under our democracy.—D. D. S., Charlottesville, Va.

Are We Agreed?

In a letter to The Post a writer states that "for ten years all America has agreed that no good came out of our intervention in the last war. Of course all America has not agreed on this or on anything else. No one is wise enough to know what would have been the result if we had not intervened in the last war. Many Americans have expressed the belief that President Wilson made no mistake when he estmated the evil of a German victory. Walter H. Smith, Washington.

Prophecy

From the book of Genesis to the last book of the Bible I read of the great struggles for supremacy by the forces of evil, but these will fail. Especially do the major and minor prophets, including Daniel and John the Revelator, point out with unerring accuracy the rise and fall of nations. They answer the question: what next? —Charles A. Rentfro, Hyattsville, Md.

Plane Exhaust

Here is a new nuisance which needs abatement and which to me seems totally unnecessary. I refer to the open exhaust of the low-flying transport airplanes. In the early morning hours at a height of from 500 to 700 feet the racket is almost unbearable. The transport companies will gain much good will should they see to it themselves.—James M. Fiske, Washington.

U. S. Principles

Democracy is predicated on certain principles, and so was the Federal character of the Government established by the Constitution as promulgated. As these principles have been abandoned or ignored by those undertaking to defend them, so "our" Government has changed from one of laws to one of men.—Harrison Tilghman, Easton, Md.

For G. O. P. Chance

New Dealers were lawmakers who allowed strikes, not a finger lifted, who allowed foreign military organizations to meet, drill, carry on propaganda, undermining United States standards. Why wasn't that stopped? Who can say what the Republicans have to offer? Give them a chance and see.—Florence E. Haynes, Washington.

Politeness

Quoting a dispatch addressed Berlin of Associated Press: "The German narrator states it would be most impolite to reveal publicly the terms for a Franco-German peace before having consulted the French government." It seems to me the phrase polite has never been a part of the German code.—Sidney Prosen, Washington.

Word of Hope

Again the swords of western Europe are drawn, its blades stained with the blood of an agnostic's adherents. But the tide of battle is favoring the ruthless hordes of the agnostic. His triumphs excites hysteria to the retreating legions. They fear their cause is hopeless. Their bodies ache. Their homes and fields lie in utter ruin. Weakly they fight . . . Praying . . . Hoping . . . They that are fighting and we that are watching may be forced to acquiesce to the agnostic's triumphal sword. But some day, posterity will read in the glorious pages of history how the Christion cross survived the agnostic's sword.—Adolph S., Washington.

On Chile

Russell Porter in The Post reports on the Fifth Column activities in Chile. He says in southern Chile German colonies were established a hundred years ago. He says all business there, agriculture, transportation, schools, stores, homes, language and way of life are more German than Chilean. Are we not then the Fifth Column interfering in internal affairs of another country that have existed for a hundred years?—J. C. Brown, Washington.

Land For Refugees

There are in the United States over 2,000,000,000 acres of land that are unused and uncultivated. Most of it is called public parks, but is not really needed by anyone. Why not donate one or more such forests to some of Hitler's victims whose homes have been destroyed, who are fleeing from the terrible inquisition in store for them if they stay and who now have no place to go—no hope? —Regal Jacobs, Los Angeles, Calif.

Grief For France

Now that French democracy too has passed away, let us pause a moment to grieve as Wadsworth did "On the Extinction of the Venetian Republic, 1802." "And what if she had seen those glories fade, those titles vanish and that strength decay; yet shall some tribute of regret be paid when her long life hath reach'd its final day; Men are we, and must grieve whenever the shade of that which once was great is pass'd away." —Eli Appelbaum, Washington.

Grant Vs. Greely

The Republicans are not the first to go to the opposition party for a Presidential candidate. The Democrats tried that back in 1872 when they nominated Horace Greely, a "Liberal Republican," to make the race against Gen. Grant, the regular Republican nominee. They have not repeated the experiment since Gen. Grant carried 31 of the 37 States.—M. F. Cunningham, Washington.

Cheers Britain

Heil Great Britain! Your sons and daughters are on the march all over the world for liberty, justice and freedom. Don't give up, as the big guns of the royal navy will thunder out the peace terms, even if it takes three years. —Reader, Washington.

France's Chance

The only hope left for France now is to imprison Petain, or something worse, and give what assistance she can to her former partner, Britain, who in turn will restore France her freedom.—P. H. Geoghegan, Los Angeles, Calif.

Gold Policy

International Manipulation Blamed For Depressions

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Repeated warning that our fiscal policy with respect to gold would result in disaster unless a realistic view was taken of the long-term outlook has been largely ignored, judging by the firm continuance of that policy, so I was not greatly surprised to read in The Post of July 16 that the "Fight to Save Gold Begins."

Two years ago I had some small part in the preparation of "Gold Manipulation and Depressions," a special report by the James True Associates. The following is partly from that study.

After the economic crash of 1929, we were convinced that the stock market and other controlling factors had been deliberately manipulated to produce the depression. Later, during the early years of the New Deal, we noticed a rather widespread impression among unprejudiced observers that the country was undergoing a "man-made" depression. However, while symptoms indicating the cause were plentiful, it was impossible at that time, apparently, to prove who the culprits were and how they had accomplished their disastrous results. In September, 1937, a study of gold movements suggested some interesting clews as to where the evidence might be found on which to base an incontestible case. After several months of research, it was evident that from the accumulated data the cause of our depression was not to be found in the faults of the capitalistic system, but in the financial manipulations of foreign interests connected with the political scheming of continental Europe.

The world has, perhaps, forgotten too readily the great monetary inflations of Germany and other central and eastern European countries soon after the World War. These came not from too much gold but from abnormally small and disappearing supplies of gold accompanied by an unrestricted supply of paper money. Toward the end of the postwar period, as nations again acquired economic strength, a less spectacular but even more far-reaching type of international financial operation was developed that yielded profit and power to the manipulators and still threatens to destroy western civilization.

The new Administration came into office in the middle of the bank panic; soon thereafter it began the new gold policy—prohibition of export of gold, devaluation, and the purchase program. While of little effect on domestic business, it had a great indirect effect favorable to agriculture, industry and labor through the reduction of the worst disturbing effects of foreign price declines. The price slump in cotton, wheat and lard, caused by the 1931 raid on British gold and the result on English prices in terms of gold was partially offset. So, also, the excessive declines in the general level of prices of imports were somewhat reduced, to the advantage of both capital and labor in industry.

Unfortunately, with the restoration of parity with England, there went a colossal purchase of foreign gold at prices which were, I feel, fixed too high and the customary sequel took place. Stock prices and business activity rose as the gold poured in. But this influx of gold brought grave dangers with it.

It did not, as was expected, result in the exchange of American commodities for the gold. In fact, our excess of exports of goods over imports declined. The credits obtained by the foreigners for the sale of this gold stayed here. Thereafter they need not bother to export or import gold to raise or lower our market prices. A sufficiently enormous fund was now located right here to have prodigious power over our stock market and, through it, of our entire industrial activity. The foreign "money changers" of whom President Roosevelt spoke in his first inaugural address had moved right into our temple.

When the gold-purchase program permitted the building up of credits here for the purchase of American securities by these internationalists, it was foreseen by students of the situation that a speculative orgy would get under way in the stock markets. This culminated in 1937 and when the tide did turn, we witnessed a more rapid plunge into depression than was seen even in 1929. And yet no other nation, not even our neighbor, Canada, shared our fate. No other cause for this collapse is discoverable than the manipulation of huge foreign holdings in our financial markets. The stock boom, based largely as it was on foreign buying, cannot be blamed on American business.

Another false boom is in the making unless we clean house; what we need is an honest boom, based on American fundamentals. We can only arrive at a proper basis for an honest recovery by adopting a spirit of cooperation with all foreign governments with respect to gold, insisting that the private, foreign manipulator be eliminated.

GULLS FLYING

White gulls flying high
Against a twilit sky,
Where will you rest tonight?
My gaze follows your flight
Until you are no more;

Yet by your faith upheld,

Must wait your waxen wings;
God guides your reckonings.

The U. S. And Japan

By Taraknath Das

A Proposed Basis For Cooperation

THE CHANGED CONDITION of world politics has forced many American statesmen to recognize the fact that they should concentrate their national efforts on the major objective of making America predominant in the Western Hemisphere and aiding Great Britain, so that the Anglo-American world will not be defeated by a combination of powers led by Germany. Some of the Anglo-American statesmen are not sure of the superiority of Anglo-American powers over the rest of the world in matters of martial strength. Thus they are seeking at least temporary allies in Russia and Japan. This fact has brought about a remarkable change of attitude toward Japan among a certain section of the American public, military and naval experts, and statesmen.

For instance, Senator Vandenberg, who was one of those who clamored not only for the abrogation of the American-Japanese commercial treaty, but imposition of embargo on exports to Japan, has very lately expressed the opinion that to promote better understanding a new trade treaty should soon be concluded between Japan and the United States.

Rear Admiral Yates Sterling, jr., formerly the chief of the American fleet, in an article published in the New York Times and New York Tribune of July 1, 1940, makes the following significant observation:

"We have been forced by developments in Europe to disperse our naval power. British, French and Netherlands strength in the Orient is negligible. The problem, as I see it, is to prevent Japan from a policy of complete

MR. ARITA
He was mild but definite cooperation with the Axis powers. This can only be done by convincing Tokyo that Japanese interests, in the long-range view, lie in cooperating with us and Britain."

THE ADMIRAL very clearly sees that with the present diplomatic revolution, Japan is no longer bound to cater to the decisions of the Anglo-American powers as she did when the Anglo-Japanese Alliance was discarded and Japanese naval strength was limited at the Washington Conference. Japan has now full freedom of choice in allying herself either with the Anglo-American powers or the so-called Axis powers, at the price she might demand.

If the Anglo-American group of powers fails to recognize Japanese vital interests, and act against Japan as they have been doing since the days of the Washington Conference, then Japan would necessarily support Germany as she is doing today. This German-Japanese cooperation may become the foundation of a bloc of European and Asiatic powers—France, Spain, Italy, Germany, Russia and Japan, etc. —against the Anglo-American world. It should be the duty of every American statesman to check such a possibility by making reasonable concessions.

TO UNDERSTAND Japan's position in world politics, one must not regard her as merely pro-German because at the present time she favors totalitarian states.

In 1895 Japan fought China on the Korean question, supposedly to protect Korean independence; but the real reason behind this war was to firmly establish Japanese influence in Korea, so that Korea would not fall prey to expanding Czarist Russia, and also to establish Japanese supremacy in a section of Manchuria. But after Japanese victory over China and the signing of the first treaty of Shmonoseki, when ,Germany, Russia and France combined against Japan and ordered her not to acquire any Chinese territory in Manchuria, she complied with the request—backed by the combined force of Germany, Russia and France—because she could not secure any support from Great Britain and the United States and she was not then able to fight a superior enemy single-handed.

When the United States occupied the Philippines, Japan supported the United States; because by doing so she was checking any possibility of German occupation of those Spanish islands (Germany was anxious to buy these islands from Spain), and at the same time she was laying the foundation for closer political relations with the United States.

IN 1902 JAPAN concluded the Anglo-Japanese agreement which was directed against Russia in Manchuria. But before concluding the Anglo-Japanese alliance Japanese statesmen, under the leadership of Prince Ito, tried their best to secure a Russo-Japanese agreement by which Japan would have been able to annex Korea and divide Manchuria between Russia and Japan. If in 1902 a Russo-Japanese alliance were concluded it might have meant a Franco-Russian-Japanese alliance supported by Germany. This would have been no less advantageous to Japan than the Anglo-Japanese agreement of 1902. Because Russia ignored Japan and refused to recognize Japanese interests in Korea, Japan joined hands with Great Britain against Russia.

Japan fought the Russo-Japanese war to eliminate Russia from Manchuria; and in this struggle in the Far East, not only Great Britain but the United States aided Japan in every possible way short of war. Japan renewed the Anglo-Japanese alliance, signed the Root-Takahira agreement with the United States, formed an entente with France and even came to an understanding with her former enemy, Russia, to consolidate her position in the Far East and to remove all opposition to annexation of Korea.

In 1910, during the Taft Administration, when Secretary Knox made the proposition for internationalization of railways in Manchuria, and Japan was opposed to such a program, Japanese statesmen formed a virtual alliance with Russia to protect their mutual interests in Manchuria. This incident should never be forgotten by students of Japanese foreign policy, because it admirably illustrates that Japanese statesmen, to promote and protect their national interests, were willing to make an alliance with a power which was Japan's enemy only a short time before.

In 1914, Japan entered the World War against Germany, primarily to eliminate the latter politically from the Far East, particularly in China. However, it must not be forgotten that Japan's entry into the war in favor of the Anglo-French-Russian entente was an important factor in winning the war against Germany. Although Germany thrice approached Japan with proposals for separate peace, the latter stuck to the side of her allies until the war was over. Japanese statesmen expected certain promised compensations for Japanese support to the cause of the Allies and thought that after the conclusion of the World War Japan would receive full support from Anglo-American-Franco-Russian group of powers. However, Japan was sorely disappointed at the opposition of the Anglo-American group of powers towards Japanese aspirations in East Asia.

When, in the Washington Conference, the Anglo-American powers checked Japanese naval power and forced her to give up some of her gains in China, Japan, realizing her own weakness, agreed to carry out the decisions. But she immediately started to strengthen her position economically, militarily, navally, and diplomatically. At the Washington Conference, Japanese statesmen agreed to give up the Anglo-Japanese alliance; but to avoid isolation in world politics, they made a prolonged effort to bring about a Sino-Japanese-Russian understanding in the Far East; and at the same time they began to cultivate closer cooperation with Germany and Italy. Thus, when in the Washington Conference British and American statesmen agreed to force friendly Japan to give up the Anglo-Japanese alliance, they indirectly persuaded Japan to seek a new alliance; and Japan's support of the Rome-Berlin axis is the result.

TODAY, JAPAN has nothing to fear from Soviet Russia, which is too busy in Europe and which has sought appeasement of Japan; Japan has no fear of France; Great Britain is impotent to attack Japan; the United States has the problem of protecting the Western Hemisphere from German and Italian penetration; Germany is willing to propitiate Japan by agreeing to Japanese expansion in Netherland's Indies and French Indo-China. Italy will be pleased to see Japan acquire further strength which would menace Britain in the Far East. Under such favorable circumstances Japanese leaders of all parties, especially Japanese militarists, are inclined to think that it is their national duty to utilize the present world situation to eliminate the influence of Western powers, especially Great Britain and France, from East Asia.

They are prepared to take the necessary steps that in case of ultimate defeat of Britain by Germany and Italy, Dutch, French and British colonies must not fall in German, Italian or American hands. This fact has been made clear by Japanese Foreign Minister Mr. Arita's mild but definite declaration, made on June 29.

UNLESS THIS all-important political aim of Japan be recognized by the Anglo-American group of powers, there cannot be any real basis for cooperation between Japan and the United States.

Recognition of the changed status in the countries in the Far East, would mean that the virtually defunct Four-Power Pact and the Nine-Power Treaty, concluded at the Washington Conference, which are not enforced so far as Japan, Great Britain and France are concerned and which are not enforcable by the United States without going to war with Japan, should be abandoned and in their place a new Anglo-American-Japanese or a nonaggression pact or an arbitration treaty on the basis of "Bryan treaties" be concluded.

Finally, as American and Japanese economic interests in general and in the Far East in particular are complementary to each other, the United States should take the initiative to conclude a new commercial treaty on the basis of reciprocity.

A WEEK-END REVIEW OF CURRENT PUBLICATIONS

After The Deluge

By Fred T. Marsh

HERE IS the Garden of Eden coming after the flood (and more than one learned theologian, as Noyes intimates, has suggested that Eden was not the, but only a new, beginning). One man and one woman discover themselves alone in the midst of death. But the serpent is also abroad. While God speaks as near as may be through the simple tongues of a few Franciscans with whom they find sanctuary. Assisi is, in fact, the only city to escape disaster.

This paradise contains the vast accumulations of our brief thousands of years of recorded civilization and storied culture.

The world has come to an end. After a hundred years of strife during which each of the several nations has sworn to fight to the last man, during which each has threatened to unleash its terrible and secret unknown weapon, the nations have made good their frantic boasts. The "secret weapon" is known to all of them, but no one of them knows how much the other knows about it. It is an aerial current that may be cast abroad, the peculiar function of which is to stop instantaneously the action of the human heart.

The United States Secret Service discovers that Japan is about to unleash the unpredictable current against America. The United States notifies Britain that it intends to anticipate the release. But other nations catch on. In the scramble to outguess each other, the secret power is turned loose by all the 12 leading nations at almost the same moment. The earth is swept clean of humanity, save Evelyn Hamilton and Mark Adams, the American girl studying in Italy, and the English youth with his medical education behing him; and, as later appears, Margok, representative of the evil that has destroyed the world, and the monks, brothers and simple people of the little city whence came St. Francis.

As the story goes, and it is a tender as well as thoughtful and allegorical tale, Mark hunts Evelyn down from clews that have come his way. The chase leads through England, France and Italy, through echoing art galleries and vast libraries. The Catholic marriage is unmately celebrated in reverence before the dead.

NEVER HAS Noyes been more the metaphysician, not often more the poet, never so thorough and outspoken a critic. As you know, Noyes is Catholic, humanist, idealistically Franciscan, practically the civilized man.

ALFRED NOYES

But it is not the college of cardinals Mark discovers in ghostly conclave that is saved from destruction. It is the simple folk of the town which has remained since St. Francis' day a sanctuary for men and the birds and little beasts.

The thread of story is gently woven into the argument. What is the argument? If you ask for keen questions and clever answers, you cannot find either here. You'll find the workings of the reflective mind expressing itself, governed by the Catholic faith. The argumentation is thoughtful, is ingenious, sincere. The poet is not attempting to make debaters' points. It is a matter of discovering in a world that has slipped into the shallow habit of living from day to day, a world that has lost all perspective in these parlous times, something simple and profound.

What informs the spirit of man? Is it material hunger which enslaves the body, the bread which feeds it and the circuses which narcoticize it? No. It is the search for God and the pull of evil. But the search must be positive; for when men slumber the power of evil leads them to destruction.

The decline of religion, culture and thought, as Noyes sees it, marked the last hundred years before the cataclysm. Humanity had become mechanized, as soulless as its own machines. The whole man no longer functioned, only specialists who "increasingly came to know 'more and more about less and less.'" "The sophisticated [apropos Raphael in one of the many passages on Western art] had grown tired of such things . . . They hated the vulgar beauty of sunsets and flowers. They hated those loyalties of art, as they hated those other loyalties . . . We'll burn Raphael's paintings in the name of the night that is coming." "They reduced the human individual to complete insignificance" and laid waste all that men had held precious, until the profound cynicism that resulted turned to suicide.

No two writers could be more dissimilar than Alfred Noyes and Upton Sinclair. But you will find more than surface similarities between this and Sinclair's "World's End," as both the Catholic humanist and old-fashioned Socialist join with Spengler in prophesying the fall of the West in its Christendom.

"NO OTHER MAN," by Alfred Noyes. Illustrated by Steele Savage. (Stokes, $2.50.)

A Novel of Suspense

"THE MAJOR HAS SEVEN GUESTS," by Constance Wagner. (Stokes, $2.50.)

SEVEN AMERICANS were leaving a central European country when they were suddenly taken off the train and confined at the Silver Goose Inn as "guests" of the government, till a certain leakage of important information could be traced. During the three weeks of their detention, the enforced confinement and close association reveal them as they really are.

Louis Delius, an average American, as the detached observer and narrator, takes little part in the happenings. Jared Holdgate, an American capitalist, at first roars loudly about his rights as an American citizen, but in the end he finds that money, even in a dictatorship, will accomplish more than mere talk. His wife, a person of neurotic detachment and indifference to her surroundings, reveals herself as a monstrous flower of evil as she finds in Carl Mungo, a fugitive from the American police, a perfect foil for her perverted tastes. The two of them take a sinister joy in torturing Julie Rember, a Midwestern girl who is giving up her violin studies because she has been told that there is no emotional depth to her music.

As the net of danger tightens about them, Isaac Moss, a scholar who has been studying conditions under a dictatorship and whose notes are confiscated, and Polly Targ, a cafe singer, are drawn together in an affection that at first appears incongruous.

This is a stirring and exciting novel, with the suspense steadily increasing as the devious workings of Mrs. Holdgate and Mungo and the eagerness of the major for a victim lead Moss and Polly Targ to their tragic end.

"SOMEDAY I'LL FIND YOU," by Margaret Widdemer. (Farrar and Rinehart, $2.)

IN THESE DAYS when there are not enough jobs to go around and the possession of a diploma is no guaranty that a career awaits you, it is comforting to make the acquaintance of a heroine for whom opportunity waits balancing no less than three silver platters. Eileen Gardner, voted the most popular and most likely to succeed in her class at the University of Denver, had been offered (1) secretaryship to the university's director of public relations, the stepping stone to being a career woman. Or she could (2) marry a young English instructor named Gordon Estill, which meant that she would settle in with the university set, tactfully push her husband, space her babies and be nice to everybody at faculty teas. Or she could (3) gamble on the offer of a small radio station whose manager thought her voice was good enough for the air.

If you know your Margaret Widdemer, you can hazard a guess that Eileen will pick the platter that promises the most excitement. Encouraged by her success on an inconspicuous wave length, Eileen tackled New York with her recording and her high hopes. She found New York more exciting than Denver, with masculine attractions more difficult to classify and manage than English instructors. This is one of Miss Widdemer's lighter confections.

Historical Roots Of Disaster

The Forces That Led Our World To Its Deadly Dilemma

By Christian Gauss.

Dean of the College, Princeton University

IF THERE is one question which every American should be asking himself today, it is this: What ails our modern civilization anyway? This is particularly true for those of us who lived through the first World War. I hesitate to say that our experience was a tragic one, for we are beginning to look too much like fools to be able to apply that lofty adjective to our story.

In general it runs like this: By 1916 most of us had become convinced that World War I was our war. We went in with conviction. After 1919 the historians, these medicine men of contemporary civilization, started to proclaim that this had been a monstrous blunder. Congressional committees began to provide the documentary evidence. We had been tricked, propagandized, by munition makers and international bankers. Never again! That is the moral climate in which our younger generation in the colleges grew up, and now their attitude is giving us concern. But now again something baffling has happened.

Nobody believes today that it is the munition makers or international bankers that are driving us to the brink of this war and there is more than a suspicion abroad that it was not international bankers and munition makers that dragooned us into the last one. Perhaps they were only the ugly flotsam on an overwhelming tide.

When we try to probe deeper, confusion becomes worse confounded. Our isolationists tell us the only remedy lies in a more rigorous, a more exclusive Americanism. They speak with all the fervor of recent converts to a new religion, and yet the doctrine which they preach is not at all unique; it is the commonest thing in the world.

This religion of the isolationists is shared by the vast majority of the statesmen and politicians in all contemporary states, democratic, Fascist or Nazi. In general terms they all want more nationalism. Just because the trouble with our Western world seems now so fundamental, it is world asking at least whether this doctrine of the isolationists, so widely spread, so deeply rooted, so fanatically held, may not have something to do with it.

WE USED to imagine that this family of nations, of which we are a part, was fundamentally Christian and that it was this common Christian origin which helped to bind us together. At the risk of provoking a smile, it is worth remarking that the economic nationalism our isolationists want is basically anti-Christian. "Economic nationalism," as Toynbee defines it, "is an exploitation of the apparatus of a parochial state for the purpose of promoting the economic interest of the population of that state at the expense of the rest of mankind." We used to imagine that the Christian virtues, the human virtues, underlay our national life. They were wide ranging, fundamental, and it was from them that our Nation's tenets drew their strength.

Have we reached the point where Christianity and nationalism are frankly at odds? A recent decision of our Supreme Court has held that children who cannot conscientiously salute our national emblem because they believe they must worship their God with all their hearts and all their minds must be denied the privilege of our public schools.

This is more than the separation of church and state. When liberal democratic nationalists, like Felix Frankfurter, write these decisions, we may well ask whether Americanism has not already progressed to an ungodly stage. Earlier Democrats, like Jefferson, who was probably the first man to use the word "Americanism," would not have agreed with our "liberalized" court of today. We should at least inquire whether democracy is drifting away from its earlier moorings in our culture. One of democracy's French champions, Gambetta, used to insist, le clericalisme, voila l'ennemi! The time has come when some Democrat must be willing to face the music and say, le nationalisme, voila l'ennemi! This steadily mounting fever of nationalism has reached the point where its delusions are hiding from us the fact that we have broken not only with our older civilization, but with that very faith in the rights of all men everywhere, from which democracy, not only in France, but in America, first drew its strength.

IN NO WORK of the twentieth century is more light to be found on these and kindred problems than in Volumes IV, V, VI of Arnold Toynbee's "A Study of History." In all civilizations, Toynbee tells us, there are three elements—a ruling class, an internal proletariat and an external proletariat. By internal proletariat he means, for instance, the barbarian tribes on the fringes of Rome, or, with us today, the Germans who are at war with our culture.

In periods of growth a creative minority, vigorous, resourceful, successfully responds to each new challenge. Such creative response possesses a charm for the masses, and they, too, respond by dancing to the piper's tune. They move to that civilization's rhythm by imitation, by what Toynbee calls mimesis. But the creative minority then takes one of two courses: it becomes merely the dominant minority, the ruling class, and, like the Chamberlains and Daladiers, for instance, rests on its oars; or, like later Roman emperors or Hitler, it resorts to regimentation, to physical force, to maintain itself in power. Tension increases within the civilization itself and between it and its external proletariat, and the end is loss of social unity, internecine strife and dissolution.

The institutions, like parliaments, democratic processes, which a still creative minority had established earlier, tend to become "intractable" in the hands of their successors, who are now only an uncreative, dominant minority, concerned more with maintaining their privileges than in meeting the new fundamental challenges. This has been the story of every one of the great civilizations in the past.

IN THE NEW installment of his work, the three stout volumes before us, Toynbee is studying in detail these processes of disintegration, and it is here that he has come into his own. He has given us by far the most significant contribution that any historian has made in the twentieth century toward the understanding of ourselves and of our own age. The remarkable thing is that they were written before World War II began, and there is here not a word which need now be altered.

Though ostensibly his subject is vanished civilizations, in reality it has become the story of the death agony of our Western world. Toynbee admits that the nationalistic histories on which our age has been fed make no sense, for any nation is only a fragment even of our own culture. This closer kinship of the bodies politic became more strikingly evident with the advent of democracy, and one of the examples of stultification he cites we may well ponder. A movement that began with a Declaration of Independence proclaiming the rights of mankind degenerated into one more parochial state.

"The natural field of action for democracy is a field that embraces all mankind, and it is on this range that its spiritual potency is beneficent. But, when this potent spiritual driving force is diverted into the mechanism of a parochial state, it no only ceases to be beneficent but becomes malignantly subversive . . . Democracy imprisoned in parochial states degenerates into nationalism.

"If we pursue our empirical

The Inherent Conflict Of Christianity And Nationalism

method of study we can watch this disastrous corruption poisoning the political life of our modern Western society."

So that for the last half century the driving force, industrialism, which also calls for a world-wide economy, like the driving force of democracy, has been diverted from building a world order into fortifying our political parochialisms. If the titanic energies of these driving forces, both of which were making for universality, were caught in the toils of parochial sovereignty, it was clear that they would burst their bonds by destroying the institution that was cramping them. The situation called for acts of creative statesmanship, which were not forthcoming from any of our self-satisfied dominant minorities.

DOES THIS MEAN that some one of the projects for "Federal union," of which we have recently heard so much, will now save us? Not as (in his desperate mood) Toynbee sees our problem. It can grant us only a reprieve. "The establishment of a universal state is a response which falls short of success because it has been achieved both too late and at too great a cost." In the terms of Toynbee's formula, the rally that is represented by the foundation of a universal state "is followed by a relapse when the society in extremis is either attacked and devoured by some aggressive contemporary or else dissolves in an interregnum out of which an affiliated civilization eventually emerges."

Man has reached the end of his sojourn in the heartbreak house of nationalism. That is Toynbee's conclusion after a survey of all past civilizations.

How seriously should we take all this? If, 20 years ago, any competent jury of scholars had been asked who was the ablest living historian of civilization, they would have said Eduard Meyer. Today they would probably say Arnold Toynbee. And clearly the lesson of Toynbee's book, and above all of his own agonizing experience, is that for this Western world there can be no cheap, no easy salvation. We may well ask: Have the fates pronounced our doom, have the doors of the future been closed upon western European civilization?

THERE ARE, of course, practitioners of the historical sciences who will disagree with much in these volumes. With certain large sections no one will disagree more thoroughly than I, for I am one of those who hold that our overhistoricized mentality is the greatest single curse now weighing down upon our culture. Man cannot live on trends alone. Our historians, of course, see everything as the product of the "forces of history," always impersonal and now mostly economic. By this process we see all things determined, all things in reverse.

But free men do not live in this dead and finished world of history, and never have. All significant human action is purposeful. It is directed toward an end, and an end is only something never yet attained, never yet fully achieved, by a man or a people. It is something that lies out there in the future. To achieve it we must transcend the past. That is the only way in which free men have ever saved themselves. It is our historians who have given us our ever-narrowing nationalism.

We must transcend history, above all the history of the last 250 years. Only at that price can we escape from this hell which we have shaped for the historians and which they have reshaped for us, and, like Dante, emerge, a riveder, le stelle, to see our stars again.

"A STUDY OF HISTORY," by Arnold J. Toynbee, Vols III, IV and V. (Oxford University Press, $23.)

The Whimsical Ways Of Wall Street

By Frank Sullivan

Here is a book about Wall Street that is sprinkled with references to Keats, Shelley, Justice Holmes, Mother Goose, Toscanini, Thackeray, Gertrude Stein, Machiavelli, Socrates, St. Thomas Aquinas, Eddie Cantor, Lincoln Steffens, Laurence Sterne, Edmund Spenser, Voltaire, Bishop Berkeley and Westbrook Pegler.

Now a phenomenon like that cannot be entirely explained by the fact that the author is a Princeton man. After all, there are plenty of Harvard men who are thoroughly up on Eddie Cantor and I have known Yale men who could quote every line of Mother Goose. Of course, they were graduate students. Fred Schwed, jr., is obviously quite a fellow in his own right. (He wrote "Whacky, the Small Boy" last year). Certainly he is an unusual Wall Streeter. I realized that even before I reached page 59, where he writes: "It should not be too radical to suggest that a young man entering (Wall) Street should have some mental equipment beyond one complete set of smoking-room stories about Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt."

Whither are we drifting? Four years ago the grand inquisitor of Wall Street would have popped Mr. Schwed into the iron maiden for a pro-Roosevelt crack like that.

He has been "in" Wall Street for ten years. This book is the distillation of his experiences there. The title came from the old one about the visitor who, after a guide pointed out the brokers' yachts moored in the East River, tactlessly said, "And where are the customers' yachts?"

Mr. Schwed cocks an amused and philosophical eye at Wall Street. He might be—in fact, he hereby is—called the Montaigne of the Money Marts. Withall he appears to be a smart lad and Wall Street could probably do with a lot more such antic philosophers. If I were J. P. Morgan, and I have no reason to suspect that I am not, I would invite Fred Schwed, jr. to become a partner forthwith.

His attitude toward the Street is irreverent but affectionate. He has a "sneaking fondness for that wretched old hag, the capitalistic system, after watching the performance of her temperamental younger rivals." He pulls the tails of the sacred cows. He does not believe that the financial big shots are omniscient, or in some cases even bright. He does not believe the market future can be foretold, "but the notion that the financial future is not predictable is just too unpleasant to be given any room at all in the Wall Streeter's consciousness." He thinks Wall Streeters are incurable romantics and children at heart. Well, aren't we all? I suppose I was an adult that day in 1937 when I bought Pennsylvania Railroad at 40.

Illustration from "Where are the Customers' Yachts?"

Mr. Schwed is heretically diverted by the pretensions of the statisticians, chart-makers and similar soothsayers of the Street, and he punctures their balloons with unseemly glee. His chapter on customers will give you a pleasing masochistic wince if you lost your shirt in 1937. He thinks most customers suffer from a common psychiatric disorder which he calls "rhinophobia, or the dread of ever having any cash." He does not pretend to know all the answers, and if you are looking for an investment program "conservative yet liberal, which will protect you from the effects of inflation and also deflation and which will allow you to sleep nights" he offers handsomely to recommend you to a good crystalgazer.

After I lost my shirt, the Corsair, in 1937, I had a morbid and hypochondriac yen to learn the details of the operation by which I had been separated from my vermiform savings account. So I read an impressive book about the stock market. It was full of lingo about major trends, stop-loss orders, portfolios and pyramiding, and there was a graph on every other page. I wish "Where Are the Customers' Yachts?" had been available then. It is humorous and wise, and there is not a graph in it. Instead, there are illustrations by Peter Arno, who goes Mr. Schwed several better by portraying Everycustomer not only minus his yacht but also minus his hat, coat, pants, shoes, socks, drawers and toupee. Maybe Mr. Arno is more of a realist than Mr. Schwed.

Mystic's Progress

By Prentiss Taylor

"SHE WAS always an oddity," said a hometown neighbor of the Mary Hunter Austin who knew herself, from childhood on, to be a mystic. To be a mystic anywhere is an uphill job, but in this country the incline seems to be steeper. That, however, never deterred Mary Hunter whom adults found a disconcerting, uncomfortable child. To her own satisfaction she emerged at the age of 13 to the realization of her "I-Mary" self.

The phases through which this pre-ordained creature lived and worked and achieved her literary eminence, are the chapters of Mr. Pearce's biography, "The Beloved House." There is the Midwest birth, of pioneer ancestry; the mystic revelation, its intensification through study of the American Indian; the prophetess, the feminist, the naturist, the poetess and story teller. With these component parts she forged ahead through a long and fruitful career. At her worst she could be fatuous and mistake timely generalities for universal truths. This is particularly true of the feminist period when her writing often became propaganda more than art. At her best she was something more than a talent to be subjected to general criticism. She was a living force.

Sometimes circumstance and her human frailty scratched the perfection of life she realised in the "I-Mary." The perfection she expressed in her credo, almost unbelievably idealistic it seems in the current crisis, "I believe that the ills of this world are remediable while we are in the world by no other means than the spirit of truth and brotherliness working their lawful occasions among men. I believe in Here and Now. I believe in Man and the Friend of the Soul of Man, and I am unconvinced of Death."

THIS WAS the credo of "The Beloved House, "Casa Querida," actually the name of her home in Santa Fe, symbolically her name for the world, real and eternal. Under this title Mr. Pearce, chairman of the English department of the Univeristy New Mexico, has written a sympathetic book that never achieves the intimacy of a memoir nor the objectivity of a critical essay, but instead is more a fair-minded and affectionate "appreciation."

The affection is restrained by awe and the criticism seems unwilling to be incisive and contents itself with mention of a few reasonable and obvious faults. Perhaps it is too soon to expect writing on Mary Austin to be more than supplementary to her writing on herself. But the significance of Mary Austin who could crusade passionately for feminism, the Indians, the California valley farmers who were being robbed of their waters to drink and bathe Los Angeles, is the far reaching worth of a living force and that is not easily scooped up for estimate.

It is to be hoped that Mr. Pearce, who is now editing Mary Austin's Southwestern Review, may one day find himself equal to such an estimate. As Carl Van Doren wrote not long after her death everyone who had ever spoken to Mary Austin recognized at once that there was "greatness in her."

Like nearly all the other products of the Caxton Press, the book is admirably printed. This very unusual publishing concern, situated in the heart of the Rocky Mountains, is rendering a most valuable service not merely by the fine example in craftsmanship, but even more by its discovery of new talents and by keeping alive the regional traditions in our literature.

THE LATE MARY AUSTIN

"THE BELOVED HOUSE," by Thomas Matthews Pearce. (Caxton Printers, Ltd., $3.50.)

Purely Ornamental

"ASK ME TOMORROW," by James Gould Cozzens. (Harcourt, Brace, $2.50.)

THE NOSTALGIA that comes from reading of civilized and genial Americans living agreeable, if practically useless, lives in Europe a few years ago is one of the pleasantest overtones of "Ask Me Tomorrow." But there are many other qualities that make the book entertaining—the proficient writing, the deft and scathing humor, the keenness, the engaging and succinctly drawn personnel. These are the fine tools that are used on a delightful and inconsequential story.

Francis Ellery is a presentable young author, not yet enough of an author to support either himself or the vainglory that goes with it. Nor is he sufficiently disinterested, or unself-conscious in his intelligence, to be much use to anyone else. To cushion himself against a fall to reality from his attitude of money (an attitude nourished by family background, by school and college, but never by money itself) he has taken a job tutoring a youngster traveling with his mother and nurse through Europe. This entourage moves from one excellent hotel to another; from Alpine skiing resorts to the alternately balmy and chilly Riviera.

Over this course Ellery follows his love, feeling with a young man's urgency, tempering with a "creative" analysis and floating in the path of least resistance. It is Ellery's hesitant indecision that charms him through and prevents the disclosure of his frequently questionable thinking. It sometimes even passes as a form of higher intelligence! It is the annihilation of any robust spirit just as it is the savior of the living to which he feels every right to be accustomed.

Handbook of Government

"FUNDAMENTALS OF AMERICAN GOVERNMENT," by William Anderson. (Holt.)

IN THIS single volume Prof. Anderson presents a compact treatment of our American political institutions, processes and functions. Brushing aside the usual historical chapters, the author dips into history only at such points where historical data seem pertinent in illustrating his treatment of the current and the future aspects of governance.

The author gives first treatment to the "units" of government in the United States and the main features of our Federal system. Then follow the general principles of political organization and law. Prof. Anderson then proceeds to a comprehensive treatment of the processes of governance—popular control, legislation, administration and adjudication. It is within this part of the study that the author achieves his objective of presenting the American system of government as one integrated articulated entity. This objective is further achieved in the final sections which add up to a survey of the major functions of government, particularly in the fields of business, communication, transportation, utilities, natural resources, agriculture, labor, social security, health and education.

Covering, as it does, the entire field of American government, the volume at points seems condensed to a degree of over simplification. However, it offers one of the ranking volumes in this field of literature and should be welcomed alike by student and layman.

CATHERYN SECLER-HUDSON.

The Brahmin's House

"THE BLACK WINDS BLOW," by Frances Bainbridge Colby (Harrison-Hilton, $2.50).

IT IS IRONIC, considering how Back Bay Boston feels about the Irish invasion, that Frances Colby should send her Boston hero all the way to Dublin to find a bride. But it provides several chapters with an attractive and sympathetic background and the description of a lively Dublin party which contrasts sharply with a later Boston one. It also provides a personable and touching heroine, Norah Morton.

That her husband, John Hillier, is considerably less fully realized is perhaps due to the corrosive maternalism which engulfs him. There is little left of him. He is sometimes attractive, but always weak and befuddled piece of humanity. He has neither the self-will nor the sententiousness that have seen his mother through and which also sustain his fiancee. The delineation of these two women is little short of savage.

On the whole, the caricature of Back Bay society is too trite and superficial, too completely regardless of its positive sides to have come from an author who has been steeped in it. Often graphic, but seldom penetrating enough, Miss Colby gives some of her dullest characters too great shares of dialogue.

All the same, there are intelligence and intensity in this first novel. The spiritual destruction of Norah in Beacon Street is a disturbing and moving story. It seems out of key with the philosophy of the book that this should be consummated by her physical destruction in Cambridge.

Impractical Pleasure

"I WANT A GARDEN," by Corinne Johnson. (House of Field, $1.)

Once can spend a pleasant half-hour reading this little 40-page book, for it is quite different in tone from the general run of gardening offerings in its price range. Perhaps, however, the pleasure will be its chief contribution, for it is largely a discussion of completed generalities and sadly lacks that underlying practical detail without which any beginning gardener would find it hard indeed to attain the results so engagingly described. No doubt Mrs. Johnson labored long and earnestly in creating the charming country garden which is the theme of her sketch

Diplomats In and Out Of Town This Summer

By Dudley Harmon.

GRANTED THAT the war has pretty thoroughly upset an erstwhile smooth routine for most of the diplomatic corps here, Yet on reading, in a New York paper recently that Mme. Loudon, wife of the Netherlands Minister, has started a cafeteria in the legation dining room, I thought, "Well, things have certainly changed." When the article went on to say that Mme. Loudon was selling delicious meals for only 25 cents, I immediately resolved to do all my future eating at the legation.

A check with the chancery however found them horrified at such a suggestion. It turns out that the story was a very garbled account of something quite different. Seems that the staff has been working such long hours since the invasion of Holland that Mme. Loudon generously suggested that they take lunch at the legation which adjoins the chancery. In appreciation of this, the secretaries and stenographers got together and decided to put in 25 cents every lunch time towards the Queen Wilhelmina fund.

THE CLERICAL STAFF of the Netherlands chancery continues to expand under pressure of work and more work. Also two additional diplomats have been ordered to Washington, when they can get passage over. They are now at Lisbon—with several thousand others—awaitting transportation on the Clipper.

TWO ERSTWHILE Latin American envoys to Washington are in the spotlight this week. Orestes Ferrara, Cuba's Ambassador here at one time, has been named envoy to Spain by his country's new President, Col. Batista. Among other claims to fame, Senor Ferrara is the man who has fought 15 different duels. He has recovered from the wound which a would-be assassin gave him in Havana several months ago.

Carlos Davila of Chile, who has been on the outs with his homeland's government for several years, has gone back there and it's reported he will stage a political comeback. For the past few years he has run a press association in New York and run a magazine, "Hoy." When he was Ambassador to Washington he was always being mixed up with the Rumanian Minister then, Charles Davila.

MAYBE IT'S the Good Neighbor policy—though the war certainly has a lot to do with it—but M. Lacaze of the Lacaze Academy of Languages here reports that there's a rush on to learn Spanish. Most of the students are people who hope to get jobs in South America.

With the fall of France, there's been a consequent disinterest in studying French. However, M. Lacaze predicts that business in this language will pick up immediately "as soon as Americans can go to France again."

His clients inevitably express surprise that he has classes in German. "Why would anyone want to learn it now?" he says. But M. Lacaze reports that people here of German ancestry have suddenly become quite conscious of the fact, and, in fact, seem very proud of Hitler!

Top Hats and Tiaras

By Betty Beale

G. HOWLAND SHAW, chief of the Division of Foreign Service personnel, tells an amusing story on himself. It seems that Mr. Shaw rented the house of his predecessor, Thomas Wilson, when the latter was appointed consul general at Sydney, Australia. Before his departure Mr. Wilson asked Mr. Shaw to have some specially fine ivy planted in his garden—ivy that had come, in fact, from no less a place than historic old Jamestown. Mr. Shaw, whose interests are decidedly less horticultural than Mr. Wilson's, instructed a servant to do the planting and thought no more about it.

After two and a half years' absence, Mr. Wilson returned to Washington a month ago and no sooner had stepped into his house and greeted his old friend than he asked, "How is my ivy doing?" Mr. Shaw confessed that he—ah—really hadn't noticed; whereupon the two men went out into the garden. Never had they seen ivy of such quality, ivy that had grown so fast and so beautifully, spread its historical luxuriance so magnificently—all over the Gale McLeans' house next door! Now Mr. Wilson, who has, perhaps, even resorted to prayer, is spending every spare minute during his vacation, before leaving for his new post in Calcutta, gently coaxing the ivy to come over to his house. The Gale McLeans have made no statement.

THERE SEEMS to be some misunderstanding in regard to the attitude of members of the British Embassy toward taking care of some of the British children to be sent to this country for safekeeping. Judging from the two cases we know of, they are every bit as eager as the most willing and helpful Americans to do what they can. Mary and Tony Coleby have long been waiting some word concerning the eight children for whom they have accepted responsibility—some of them relatives. They will keep two in their own home and have promised to see that the other six get proper care. The H. A. C. Rumbolds are in a similar position, having sometime ago assumed responsibility for ten children. Of course, whether or not the British government is now going to send the children is an open question.

DESPITE THE CHARM of the home town, people will leave. Here are the latest departures on record: Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Aspinwall left Thursday for a six weeks' tour that will take them to Niagara Falls, Banff, Vancouver, thence by boat to Alaska and then down to California, where they will visit Mr. Aspinwall's daughter, Mrs. John Baldwin . . . Marion Shouse entertained at cocktails on Wednesday for Teeny and Dick Hawkins, who left the following day for Dick's new Foreign Service post in Brisbane, Australia . . . Bill Boswell, another Foreign Service officer, left Wednesday for British Guiana . . . Louise and Robie Robinson headed north a few days ago. They have gone to Bar Harbor, where they will board a friend's yacht for a coastal cruise of three weeks.

Kitty Du Bois went to Marblehead, Mass., on Friday to join her parents for the remainder of the summer . . . Mary Coleby and Felicity Rumbold will go to Marion, Mass., tomorrow to join their children there . . . Johnny Galliher will spend the week-end on Long Island, visiting Lila O'Donnell at Sayville, Tasha Mayo at Southampton and the Lawrence Bakers at Easthampton . . . Ruth Tuckerman left a few days ago for Chicago, where she will remain until November, working for the National Republican Committee . . . Homer Stillwell has gone to Philadelphia to work for the Surplus Commodities Corporation for the summer . . . And one welcome exception to the general exodus was the unexpected arrival of Betty Sprague, who is visiting her mother for two weeks.

Among those expected are Walter Clarkson and Thomas Clarkson, of Alexandria, both sons of the late Dr. and Mrs. Clarkson, of Haymarket.

MR. AND MRS. H. Gwynne Tayloe, jr., of Front Royal, gave a dinner party last night at Windover, the home of Mr. Tayloe's parents, near Middleburg. Their guests went on from there to the dance given by "The Spinsters" at Goose Creek Tavern in Leesburg for the benefit of the Red Cross.

Madame Chairman

Elections are all over in most of the clubs this year. Some of them have chosen their officers wisely and will expand both in their field of usefulness and in their membership. Others have let petty considerations sway them and will find themselves hampered in their efforts toward progress.

In normal times it is not of great importance, except to the organization itself, whom it chooses as its head. Its service to the community and to individual members will be largely measured by its wisdom in the selection, but no great harm will be done if it has made a mistake.

Today the situation is different. There is a responsibility on every group of organized Americans to be in a position to render service to the Nation. This may be in war relief work, expressing America's humanitarian spirit to the suffering people aboard. It may be in the promulgation of American ideals of freedom and democracy. It may be joining in some broad cooperative effort with other groups in connection with the national defense program.

There is no question about the ready spirit of the women's organizations throughout the country. Thousands of their members are already devoting themselves to Red Cross work, hundreds have signified their willingness to open their homes to refugee children, they have committees on patriotic education. Wherever there is need of their service they are eager to give it—but the effectiveness of their work can be seriously hindered by lack of leadership.

The time has come for club women to choose their officers from the standpoint of their ability to fill the jobs assigned them. The fact that a woman has money, social position or wants to be president because she considers it an honor, has nothing to do with her fitness for the post. Her money or social position neither qualify her nor disqualify her. They should not weigh in consideration of her as a candidate. But her desire for the office for personal gratification would in itself, be a warning of the attitude likely to be found in her administration of it.

No woman should be elected just because she is "such a sweet person" or because she always brings nice lemon pies to a bazaar; because she entertains lavishly or just because she has good taste in hats.

The intelligent club member will consider for president of her organization, a woman who is impersonal and objective in her dealings, who knows how to conduct business meetings according to correct parliamentary procedure; who holds the welfare of the club and its place in the community above personal considerations, and who cannot be taken in by promoters desirous of enlisting support for questionable projects. She should also be free from obligations to her home or her work that will prevent her giving adequate time to her club duties.

It may be said for the foremost national women's organizations—and to their great credit—that they are headed today by women of broad vision, sound judgment and unselfish aims. Among these are the General Federation of Women's Clubs, with Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar; the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, with Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr.; the League of Women Voters, with Miss Marguerite Wells—organizations whose chief executives we know best because their headquarters are located here.

The leadership of such powerful national groups is, of course of more vital importance than that of local or even State organizations but at this time it is imperative that all women's clubs have at their head capable, impartial, intelligent officers.

Because women's organizations in this country can exert great influence, there will be bids for their support from many directions. Some will be legitimate others will not be. Efforts to use the women's clubs to back commercial enterprises are not new. They appear in all kinds of guises, but the alert club president recognizes them and protects her organization from being misled. She also knows propaganda when she sees it either in the shape of a proffered "free" speaker or a letter asking backing for one movement or another.

Most clubs will not elect new officers until next spring, but they should begin thinking about potential candidates as soon as the fall season opens. There is opportunity to look around as the activities of the year progress and to pick out for new officers, persons whose abilities and conduct recommend them. The intelligent club member will vote for the woman she believes will make the best officer, even if she is an individual whom she does not particularly like personally. And only as club women are guided by intelligence rather than pettiness and prejudice, can they fulfill the obligation their voice in national affairs imposes upon them.

Out of My Mind

True or False?

By Katharine Brush

Magazine fiction is getting a little gayer than it was, thank goodness . . . Nothing lifts a street crowd's spirits like a man chasing a hat . . . There is a point in every horse race (usually at its farthest from you) when the horses look like a charm bracelet, or like a junk-jewelry necklace . . . It is strangely hard to throw away the betting tickets on which you have lost . . .

The roar of the crowd at ball games is becoming a squeal, it's so soprano . . . There are far too many potatoes in clam chowder, and that's that . . . Women who smoke on the streets are increasing in number every minute, but the odd fact still remains that only the funnier-looking ones seem to do it . . . Once upon a time there was a war we called "the phony war," and now we're sorry.

There are two conversational topics which fascinate absolutely everybody—and one of them is "Unexplained Mysteries," and the other is "Buried Treasure." . . . At the rate at which potato chips are consumed in cocktail bars, you wouldn't think they'd have a chance to get as stale as you sometimes find them . . . One of the terrors of travel is the business of waking up suddenly in the middle of the night in a strange hotel room or guest room and not being able to remember, for a ghastly minute, where you are. . . . There is nothing so exhausting as a restful week-end on Long Island . . .

The only sensible feminine costume for a summer motor trip is a shirt and slacks and a bandanna, and the sooner we all break down and get ourselves out of those wrinkled dresses and those hurting hats, the better . . . The most helpless of all God's creatures is a woman whose nail polish hasn't yet dried . . . why do we cling to the notion that we don't want to hear about other people's troubles, when as a matter of fact there's practically nothing that intrigues us more? . . .

It hasn't occurred to the picture magazines that maybe we'd all like a little less candor, and a few more rosy illusions, when it comes to our favorite celebrities.

It isn't the champagne that makes you giddy, it's the speed and steadiness with which the waiters keep refilling your glass with it when you're not looking . . . The average New York dinner party doesn't break up until 2 a. m., and this is in spite of the hostess's air of hopeful expectation, from 10 o'clock on . . . Only debutantes comb their hair at restaurant tables, and let's thank heaven for that . . . Surely the rising generation has the biggest feet ever seen in the world . . .

After any public disaster—such as a train wreck, for example—you always hear hundreds of anecdotes about hundreds of different people who meant to take that particular train, but missed it by a bare half minute . . . Nine taxidrivers out of ten will tell you that they fought in France in the last war, but very few of them seem able (or willing, is it?) to give details. . . . The life insurance rates on dance musicians are very high, and when you see the way they live and work, and sometimes drink, and never eat, you understand it . . . Profound amazement is the chief reaction of the American public to any new commodity, if one is to believe the radio announcers. . . .

There is no better way to make enemies and alienate people than to stop them from telling the stories they've told you before, just because they've instructed you to . . . Now that women have practically given up eating desserts, the restaurants are making them look more luscious than ever, the meanies . . . Be you male or female, it is a grave mistake ever to let the drunk at the next table catch your eye, even for a second . . . Over he comes, and stays for hours . . .

The proudest man seen lately in these parts was a stranger who was boasting that he'd consumed more than his quota of those "only two to a person" drinks. "The fact is, I've had five," he bragged; and so saying, and still beaming, and still holding up five fingers, he fell at our feet and passed out cold . . .

There's a lesson in the fact that the boys who push the rolling chairs on the Atlantic boardwalk have pratically no hips at all, whereas their passengers—well, never mind . . . Men are actually getting quite brave about reading the women's magazines . . . It's simply amazing how the Red Cross headdress softens and beautifies the wearers' faces . . . All seems to be quiet in the Michigan sector of Gov. Dickinson, which seems a pity . . . The Nation needs to be amused, and he once did it.

'Streamlining' Cuts Into the Army's Vacation

Col. Willis D. Crittenberger To Fort Knox

THE THINGS a crisis can do to a vacation are woeful. For example, all the brand new lieutenants of the West Point graduating class of 1940, have just had their graduation leave cut in half and will have to report to their first stations not later than July 31.

Nor are they the only ones to feel the pressure of the situation. What with the new streamlining of the Army, and the creating of large divisions in a few centralized areas, many a service family finds itself practically on the way to the new post, before they have caught their breath from the suddenness of the orders. One officer at Fort Benning recently was ordered to Fort Knox, and was given five days to close his house, pack his furniture and be at the new station. And yet, somehow, way down deep, service folk don't really resent such a scurry, they kind of like it, it peps up life and gives them a chance to prove how fast they can move when necessary.

Col. Willis D. Crittenberger, of Washington, has also just been ordered to Fort Knox, Ky., and he and Mrs. Crittenberger will be on their way by Tuesday.

• • • •

UP IN THE HILLS of Blue Ridge Summit the former chief of staff, Gen. Malin Craig and Mrs. Craig, have opened their summer cottage, and have been entertaining their friends there over week-ends.

ALREADY MOVED IN to their new quarters are the new Deputy Chief of Staff, Brig. Gen. William Bryden and Mrs. Bryden. They are occupying a set next to that of Chief of Staff, Gen. Marshall, at Fort Myer. Gen. Bryden replaces Gen. Lorenzo D. Gasser, just retired.

Capt. Reeves daughter, Miss Margaret Reeves, was married on Saturday a week ago, at the home of her brother-in-law and sister, Capt. and Mrs. Howard Ker in Alexandria. Following their honeymoon, she and her husband Frank Eugene Barron, jr., will make their home in Charleston, S. C., where Mr. Barron, an engineer, is connected.

HAVING DISPOSED of his house in Charleston, Capt. Reeves visited the Kers during the wedding festivities, and has now gone on to Cambridge, Md., where he is visiting another son-in-law and daughter, Lieut. and Mrs. E. A. Col. and Mrs. Paul Capron, who were in town for the Reeves-Barron wedding have returned to their home in New York.

Australia's 1-Woman C. of C.

By Carolyn Bell

A CONTINENT OVERRUN by kangaroos and aborigines is the average American's conception of Australia, according to Miss Pat Jarrett, who seems to have set up a one-women chamber of commerce here to change that idea.

"The questions I am asked about my country are amazing," says Miss Jarrett, "why some aren't even printable!" But we'll wager the breezy and extremely Miss Jarrett will soon have us all yearning to board the clipper bound for Australia.

A newspaperwoman by profession, Miss Jarrett is now secretary of the Australian Legation here. She hopes to write several articles while here about her country and no doubt will send some written impressions back home about the United States.

HER ONE DESIRE at the moment is to try out the surf bathing here, but she has already been warned not to be disappointed. Miss Jarrett lyrically tells of the Australian beaches—"wide, deserted expanse of golden sand, huge waves and crystal clear water." An expert at surfboard riding and surf-skiing (most Australians are it seems), Miss Jarrett is anxious to see our water sports.

DIPLOMATIC CIRCLING

Skiing in the Autralian Alps is another of Miss Jarrett's favorites. Although difficult to get to, the mountains there provide both thrilling and dangerous sport.

THE ZOGS POPPED up in the news again this week. It is reported that the erstwhile King of Albania, his beauteous Queen Geraldine, the infant Crown Prince Iskander and his three sisters, would like to emigrate to the United States.

The former Minister to Albania, Faik Konitza (who incidentally was prominently mentioned in Ann Corio's recent article on her love life) has been besieged with telegrams, calls and letters in regard to the whereabouts of the Zog family. Konitza would like it known that he has "lost contact with them." Konitza, who has given up his Mayflower quarters, is now in an apartment immersed in the duties of writing a book. It will be about Albania, in particular, and European politics in general.

Yes, it's a privilege to live in Washington ANY MONTH OF THE YEAR. Summertime offers SO much to "stay-at-homes," and I've incorporated, into my column, a few "summertime advantages" for you Washington folks. Do you spend hours searching "miles of aisles" for that certain item you most desire? I just bet you allow last-minute necessity to beget extravagance in an otherwise nicely managed budget. Does yuh? Back to Nature

Isn't it wonderful to get out in the open this way?"

"Marvelous! Now, if we can just find a shady bench——"

"There's one—no, wait! It's too near that picnic party."

"Let's try that far one——"

"No, look at all those children. We'd get hit by a ball."

"Oh, here's a perfect one!

"It is! . . . . No, wait. Don't sit down THERE! . . . Honestly there ought to be a law against those birds!

"Oh, there's a nice bench—over there in the grass"

"It's in the sun."

"Well, we'll simply have to move it."

"All right."

"Heavens . . . those . . . benches are . . . heavy! Now, then, I guess we're all set"

"Isn't this glorious!"

"Simply divine! Why on earth people want to stay cooped up in houses—say, do you feel a draft?"

"It's just the wind. You see, the whole trouble is we all lead such unnatural lives——"

"Say, couldn't we turn this bench around? With this summer cold I can't stand that wind on my back."

"All right . . . Heavens . . . these . . . benches . . . are . . . heavy! Now, then, we're all set"

"Isn't this lovely and peaceful?"

"Perfectly marvelous—say, do I smell something?"

"I don't know—wait . . Oh, yes, its bananas!"

"I thought it was pickles."

"I bet it's from that trash can—see over there where those picnickers were. The wind's in that direction."

"Let's go to that bench over there under the tree."

"There's no grass under it."

"We can pull it out."

"All right."

"Heavens . . . those . . . benches . . . . are . . . heavy! Now, I guess we're all set at last."

"Isn't it marvelous to sit here and feel the grass under your feet?"

"Definitely! You know this is what nature intended—say, do you suppose there are any chiggers here?"

"No, why?"

"My ankles sort of itch."

"That's just imagination. Now, let's just relax and absorb all this beauty."

"All right, but first I'm going to put this newspaper under my feet. . . . Say, did you bring that book of poetry?"

"I'll read it now—wait, though, I believe I'll put some newspapers under my feet. My ankles feel funny, too. . . . Now, that's better."

"Go ahead and read?"

"All right. . . . Say, I can't read! The sun's right in my eyes."

"We'll have to turn the bench around."

"All right."

"Heavens . . . those . . . benches . . . are . . . heavy! . . . Now, let me fix my newspapers. . . . All right, go ahead and read."

"In a minute! Say, Where did that funny little worm come from!"

"They drop out of the trees. We should have pulled the bench out farther."

"Well, we're not going to change it again. Say, there's something biting my ankle."

"It's just a fly. Shoo! Shoo!"

"Now, then, let me find a nice poem—wait, I'm going to put my handkerchief over my ankles.

"I believe I will, too. Those flies are so persistent! Say, where did that hornet come from?"

"I don't know, but there's a man sitting over there on that other bench who's acting awfully funny."

"Now, why did he have to sit there—with all those other benches."

"It looks to me as if he were trying to start something. He's a very suspicious character."

"Yes, and you know you read about things like that. It's really not safe any more——"

"Let's not pay any attention to him. Now, where's my poem—oh, here it is. Wait, that sun has shifted again! It's right in my eyes!"

"Well, I simply can't lift that bench another time!"

"I can't either. Say, is there something moving on my neck?"

"I can't see anything, but—I was just wondering——"

"Yes?"

"Since the flies are so bad and everything don't you think we might just as well——"

"Yes I do!"

"We could sit on the screened porch and Viola could make us a nice mint julep."

"All right. Let's hurry!"

Our 35th Annual Summer Sale

brings you Miracles in

FUR VALUES

The largest assemblage of fur fashions in our history is awaiting your approval. All at miraculous summer sale savings! Our tips: due to world market conditions, it's wise to buy now.

Miracles in Mink-Blended Muskrat $139

Miracles in China Mink Blended $259

Miracles in Black Persian Lamb $195

Exceptional Values Dominate the Scene in the Advance Showing of Fur Coats

WITH THE ADVENT of the mid-season sales this question arises in everyone's mind: Just how will it benefit me to invest in a fur coat now? The rather upset conditions prevailing now in the world fur markets give a definite promise of a coming uptrend in fur prices, and show a decided savings in the prices extant.

The London market, a great clearing place for furs, is already in a very upset state; and with the North Sea and Mediterranean closed more or less to regular shipping, Russia finds herself restricted in exporting to this country. Also China, with her long-drawn war is finding it difficult to export anything like a normal quota of furs.

Naturally these circumstances compel us to look to our own continent for furs; but with the increasing demands for domestic furs, their prices will rise, too. Even if conditions should right themselves almost immediately at least several years might have to pass before these present price trends could be changed. Bearing in mind these facts it would pay the Washington woman to look to the offerings in the summer sales as opportunities for investments not likely to be duplicated for some time to come.

Information regarding the sources of these fur fashions can be obtained by calling NA. 4200.

Right, gleaming black persian is again destined to be a favorite. Featherlight, it is as easily worked as the most supple cloth, as noted in its softly rolled collar, wide Schiaparelli sleeves and yokeless ripple back.

Above, Famous Hollander northern muskrat deftly blended by turkey feathers into a rich, sparkling sable shade. The new stand-up collar and full bloused sleeves are very new.

Left, luxurious and breathtakingly beautiful. Persian broadtail taken from the still-born and unborn lamb. The moire markings are exquisite, and the peltries are as supple as velvet. The Molyneux bloused-back style is very new.

Decidedly smart for 1940-41 and on. Tawny-gold sheared beaver. A deep piled fur of great flattery in a three-quarter length coat. The slightly larger collar and extremely wide sleeves are very new.

Youngsters Drop One, Purl One for Boys Abroad

Canary yellow was the color chosen for the crocheted evening sweater worn by Maureen O'Hara (left). Olivia de Haviland (right) wears a more tailored knitted sweater of contrasting colors. Glamorous Madeleine Carroll has turned her talent for knitting to more serious subjects and has organized a class of youngsters to help her knit articles for a group of refugee children in France. She is pictured below with one of her pupils.

Youth Is Tending To Its Knitting In Troublous Times

By Marshall Adams

The Post Fashion Editor.

DROP ONE, purl one, drop one, purl one.

That seems to be the new battle cry of youngsters all over America who have suddenly become aroused about the clothing situation abroad. Never has there been such a wholesale interest in knitting, both for fashion's sake and for the "boys abroad," as has spread through this country in the last two or three months.

What directly was the cause of this craze and how it will affect the fashions we wear in this country is hard to conjecture now, but the fact is that yarn and knit goods dealers in Washington and elsewhere report they are hard put to keep even skeins of yarn on hand. They insist there is at least 10 per cent more knitting done now than at the same time six months ago and that if the war continues, this percentage will take another big rise. They aren't quite sure whether it was due to Mrs. Roosevelt's diligent knitting habits or to those of screen stars like Joan Crawford, who purls away even at nightclubs. They are quite sure however, that it is a very healthy, normalizing habit to adopt in a time of unrest and one highly profitable to the overseas refugees.

Everywhere in town there are stations erected to receive hand-knit "comforts" or "oddities," dependent upon the ability of the knitter. These war relief charities include a Queen Wilhelmina Fund, a Belgium Relief Fund, a Finnish-American Relief Fund, a Bundles for Britain Fund and two for France—one the French Relief—the other for the American Friends of France.

The most popular group at present seems to be the Bundles for Britain group, which receives everything from sweaters, scarves blankets and mufflers to timidly-done socks. Many of these come from 12-year-olds who never held a needle in their hands before. They seem quite fearless, however, and in the 16 or 18-year-old group, there are varied clubs formed for the advancement of the knitting art.

At first it might take the novice two or three weeks to knit a simple slip-on sweater in her spare time, but as confidence and incentive grow, she can whittle this down to a period of 5 or 6 days flat.

From a practical fashion standpoint, needle art could be more useful at the moment, for with new fall costumes for the business girl to fret over and new sweater wardrobes for the college and school girl to consider, the knit craze is a God-send. A really nice quality yarn, sufficient for a twin sweater set, can be bought for from $5 to $10. The same cardigan and pull-over set would cost at the least $15 or $20 for a store-bought "hand knit." And the satisfaction of creating something personal would be lost.

Eventually daring needle-twirlers attempt whole suits or jacket and skirt combinations, and there's where originality and budget savings have a holiday. For the still timid in heart however, there is a painless way of learning which includes buying—say a white rayon shawl with red and blue wool for making wool fringe and festive stamped-flower embroideries. The effect when finished is so satisfying that it will probably add a new convert to the growing list of "emergency knitters."

Give Your Home An Appearance Of Coolness

Change Curtains, Pictures; Mirrors Magic in Summer

When midsummer finally catches up with us, even our most satisfying city rooms may seem stuffy. If "home" happens to be a tiny apartment, the prospect of the humid, sweltering heat of late July and August gives just the incentive to take things in hand.

Curtains down? Probably. Or, if your windows must have them for privacy's sake, put up one of the glazed dust-resistant materials which will not require constant laundering.

"Argentine" comes 54 inches wide and offers unlimited possibilities in tones of peach, yellow, soft greens, rose, tan, white. Shirred directly on two rods, one at the top and one at the bottom, against window glass, one pair will serve, and look fresh, practically all summer. Just give them an occasional light brushing or use the vacuum cleaner attachment. Fashioned into draperies, this fabric is cool to look at, especially with crystal tie-backs.

Old-fashioned ticking too comes in delightful color combinations these days, and is lots of fun to work with in summer rooms where a heavier material seems necessary.

Put away the good lampshades. Gay, inexpensive paper shades will be just the thing for your light-hearted house. Fresh paint on the old tin wastebaskets, or a few new cardboard baskets should replace the heavier ones of leather or wood.

Plan a change for your summer bedroom if possible. You may dip-dye a too-familiar bedspread and add a gay inexpensive skirt to the bedstead as well as your dressing table. Simple cool fabrics will give you a "vacation" feeling.

Mirrors are magic in summer rooms and should be used wherever possible. They make any room seem lighter and cooler. Take down any pictures that suggest warmth and winter (providing, of course, there isn't a spot left on the wall behind which can't be covered up by something else).

Down comes the painting of the fireside scene, up goes the picture of cool boats on the river. Etchings are often cool-looking, too, and water colors perfect! Unframed prints mounted on wide mats have a real place in summer rooms.

Any copper and brass wares or elaborate silver pieces had better be put away. You don't want to polish them in summer! Get out all the white pottery, grandmother's Wedgewood pitcher and the jasper bowl with the jade lining. Lots of glass containers will help things to look cool.

New Beauty Preparations Can Help You Keep Well-Groomed At the Beach Despite the Ravages of Sun and Salt Water

By Carolyn Abbott.

WIT HTHE beach season in full swing and the daily dip a "must" for seaside vacationers, the problem of how to keep well groomed rears its provoking head. Sun and salt water take their toll of skin beauty. Sea breezes and Old Sol's penetrating rays play havoc with the hair. And unless you take necessary precautions to counteract the ravages of a beach stay you will be completely deglamourized.

Chief destroyer of facial beauty is the daily swim. Make-up smears and loses its freshness, and when you emerge from the waves not even your best beau could pretend that you are lovely. However, all that is past, for a new waterproof make-up has been created to withstand the onslaught of wind, dust, sun and the frequent swim. Billy Rose's Aquacade girls at the New York World's Fair inspired this water-resistant make-up. Termed "Aquacade," this new line of cosmetics includes a foundation cream and lotion, a fine-textured face powder, vivid lipstick and a protective oil for the hair. The foundation lotion (cream if your skin is dry) forms a velvety, lasting base for your make-up and completely conceals all blemishes. Since the make-up is water resistant it can be removed only with oil. This type of make-up is an innovation and should make beach grooming one degree less difficult.

Waterproof Cream Keeps Make-up Intact

Another cosmetician, famous for her young skin products, contributes a waterproof cream that keeps make-up intact through a round of daily swimming and nightly dancing. It is made in five flattering shades, light to dark. The darker shades simulate a sun-tanned appearance and tone down freckles and sun spots.

Hair has a tendency to get wiry and uncontrollable at the beach. The sun depletes the natural oils and sheen. When sun-tanning or strolling on the strand protect the hair with a sunscreen lotion. There is a new hair protector oil, "Protecsun," which acts as shield against the hot sun rays and prevents the hair from becoming streaked and discolored. Still another aid to good grooming is a cream set and a lotion that will help you keep your flying locks in place.

Salt water is hard on the hair. Leave it in and the chemicals from the sea will cause the hair to break off. If you shampoo it after each swim (and who has time for that on a vacation?) it will become dry and brittle. A dry shampoo takes less time and when done properly does not muss up the waves. You have your choice between a dry cleanser in liquid form and a powder. Each is made by different hair specialists and is equally effective. As an added precaution and protection, rub a little olive oil or one of the commercially prepared oils into the scalp at least twice a week.

Feet that run bare or peek out from beach sandals also require attention. Pedicure them as often as necessary to keep them in good condition. Match your polish to your lipstick and fingernails.

Hands, Too, Require Careful Grooming

Hands, too, will need grooming. After exposure to beach sun and air, apply olive oil every night. Rub it in carefully, then wipe it off with a soft towel. Two or three times a week massage your hands with a heavy cream and olive oil. If your hands are dry a good rich cream will do them more good than a lotion. It should be applied morning and night, and when possible after the daily swim.

Massage and exercise help to keep hands young. Wash them with care, then massage with a mixture of warm almond oil and cocoa butter, working it in as if you were putting on gloves, starting at the fingertips. Keep the application on overnight.

To facilitate the manicure all the necessary products are neatly packaged in a compact kit. One of the newest, "Mad Money," contains a well known nail enamel, oily nonacid remover and adheron (base coat). The cases are made in specially processed shantung, faille or print fabrics with bright, contrasting linings. When the original contents of the kit are removed it becomes a miniature pocketbook.

All the necessary preparations, such as cleansing cream, suntan oils and antisun products, come in tricky little kits that can be yanked into service at a moment's notice.

Practically any product that you need to preserve your beauty at the beach or on a cruise is available. It is up to you to apply them properly.

Down one—up two! Adelaide Mahalic, another member of Billy Rose's Aquacade chorus plunges her head into a bowl of water to test a new water-proof make-up created by an internationally known New York cosmetician. She finds that the water leaves her new make-up intact after hours of swimming.

Miss Ottinger Arranges Music for A.A.U.W. Tea

Miss Barbara Ottinger has arranged for a program of music at the tea of the American Association of University Women's Club tomorrow afternoon. Clarke A. Paulsen, barytone soloist, a member of the choir of St. John's Church, will sing, accompanied by Miss Carney at the piano. Mr. Paulsen is a student at the Peabody Conservatory of Music, in Baltimore.

The hostesses for the afternoon are Mrs. Ena Thompson and Miss Helen White.

Drinking water from the fish bowl? Not this mermaid. Joan Van Der Veer, lovely Aquabelle of Billy Rose's Aquacade, demonstrates the effects of water on the usual make-up. Mascara soots the cheeks, lipstick smudges and powder disappears. When she emerges from a swim, her face is completely deglamorized.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Man Has Known Four Girls He Wanted to Marry; Two Are Wed; Death Took One, and the Fourth Discourages Him; Is There Way of Winning Her?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have known four girls that I wanted to marry. Two of them married other men; one girl died, and the fourth girl is my reason for writing to you. I have known her almost three years. I was one of her first dates and I saw her regularly for several months, after which she went away on a summer trip. Thus ended one phase of our friendship.

Since then, she has been busy all the time—going to school, visiting away from home and going to a round of parties during the holidays. I have tried at every turn to see her, but have succeeded only twice. My batting average on the telephone has been pretty low, although I have talked to her several times that way. I have given her a few presents and she liked each one.

When I was with her, I never spoke of love, except once I found out from her that her only plans are (1) finishing college, and (2) a vaguely imagined marriage to nobody in particular. When I first met her, I was ashamed of my job, but since then I have transferred to a field that has some future. I am new in the field and drawing a smaller salary than before. Also, I am now located several hundred miles away from her, and have many opportunities to meet other girls, but the desire to see her is greater than ever.

Without Her Friendship, Life Lacks Motivation

Since taking my new job, I have made three unsuccessful trips back home; unsuccessful from the standpoint of seeing her, except once for about 15 minutes. If I could go with her again, I would try to get transferred back home; and I think it could be arranged. But aside from her, my life has no real motivation, although I want to plan my life, and I must plan it in order to get ahead.

I was home last week, and talked with her a while on the telephone. On coming back here, I wrote her a note, telling her that I love her and want to marry her, and that there is no one else. That note is one of several letters I have written to her without getting a reply, although she promised a couple of times that she would write. She has no snapshots to send me, either.

About myself: I have been going to dances since grammar school days, 15 years ago. I have had many dates, but mostly with the idea of being with "the crowd" and having a good time. Today, the friends I have are those I work with or happen to meet, and a few persons I keep in touch with back home.

Can you give me any advice on how to make headway with this girl? I have a nagging self-consciousness in relation to her that perhaps you can help me overcome. I would like to be able to work out my own problem, but I've got to the place where I feel the need of help. WORRIED.

Face These Three Facts And Cease Day Dreaming

DEAR WORRIED: The best advice I can give you is to accept the following facts: (1) that you are up against a stone wall at the end of a blind alley, (2) that there is no hope in the immediate future, at least (which is to say, in the next few years), of your making more "headway" with the girl, and (3) that you must, therefore, set your face in another direction and get ahead with the business of living, without her, and without any further depressing day dreams about her.

You have been living in a dream for too long, while she has been forgetting you entirely (except when you intrude yourself upon her attention) in her enthusiastic address to the persons and pleasures under her nose. You were one of her "first dates," you say—and that explains a great deal. When first she went out with you, she had no standard of comparison by which to know definitely the kind of boy she would find most attractive. So she accepted your attentions throughout that freshman season.

But after a summer's trip, during which she met other boys, no doubt, I daresay she began (unconsciously) to draft a set of specifications concerning the kind of beaux she wanted; and as her popularity increased, she had a larger field to choose from and so began, on the one hand, to encourage those she found most congenial, and, on the other hand, to discourage those who held no great appeal for her. Her consistently discouraging treatment of you clearly indicates that her mood by no means corresponds to yours; that she feels you just don't belong in her scheme of things.

The Humanitarian Value Of Compassionate Candor

Her failure to tell you bluntly that she has more interesting beaux on her string is probably due to a young girl's pardonable vanity. All young ladies who haven't yet learned the humanitarian value of compassionate candor are inclined to keep unwanted admirers dangling in uncertainty, as additional certification of their matrimonial desirability. This is unfair and unkind, of course; but perhaps it adds to a kind of Cosmic Pay-Off against many vain men's equally heartless treatment of ingenuous women. Some artless souls in either camp are bound to get hurt in this immemorial (and deplorable) struggle for egoistic dominance between the sexes.

Whether you are ever to make a dent on this girl's romantic consciousness is on the laps of the gods. If it should happen, it will be some years in the future, when you have achieved some professional eminence and some distinguished maturity of character, which bring you to her attention as a more dashing and desirable figure than you are today. But if you should become that More-Magnetic-Person, you probably would have so far outgrown the youth you are today as to have more or less forgotten this girl who now seems so important to this youth.

So I suggest, in conclusion, that you rest the case on the laps of the gods by relinquishing the dream and addressing yourself four square to the professional and social realities of your immediate environment. The energies you are wasting in day dreams of her—devote to your work. Give it everything you've got, during working hours. And after hours, put her image out of mind and give your whole receptive, responsive attention to the girls in your vicinity who can be good friends and diverting companions.

Release From Her Spell Can Be Achieved

Release from her spell will come sooner than you think, when you stop drugging your system with lovesick, frustrated thoughts of her. And this kind of emancipation, when once achieved, will constitute the lasting cure of your "nagging self-consciousness in relation to her," supposing your paths ever cross again. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Display Home Can Be Had At Low Cost

House in Ideal Location Offers Gracious Living

By Martha Ellyn

The trim brick house, known as The Post Display Home, located at 3104 Lyndale place southeast and presented by J. Wesley Buchanan, is a shining example of a moderately priced home that deserves the name of Budget House. If you have a little more than $1 a day to be spent for housing and you want to possess your own home, this model home is one you will want to investigate thoroughly.

With a background of lovely Fort Dupont Park, which is a section heavily wooded and bordering a brook, and nearby tracts—Anacostia Parkway, Kenilworth Water Lily Gardens, National Arboretum, there is little to be desired as to surrounding atmosphere.

The builders, and the Palais Royal as interior decorator, have done a worthwhile job in developing the interior of this model home, too. Its general lines suggest Colonial architecture, and the inside atmosphere gives one the feeling of genuine hominess.

Red Accents Kitchen

The pleasant living room with its light gray paper, white woodwork and wrought-iron staircase, decorated in black and ivory, has been attractively furnished. The dining room follows the general color scheme of the living room with grey walls and white woodwork.

Red is the accent color in the kitchen that is made exceedingly light with its buff-colored walls.

Down in the spacious rumpus room is a pleasant surprise, for it is a veritable second living room. The first thing one notices is how delightfully cool it is. Blue matting rugs, with gay red curtains at the three windows and one door, give it an exotic note. Comfortable reed furniture, upholstered in red, blue and Roman striped material, dispels anything like monotony.

Even the gas heater looks like a part of the decorations. It is a lovely shade of green with black and chromium trim. There is laundry equipment cunningly concealed in its own individual corner, and close by a door where one can conveniently go out to hang the washing.

Have Cross-Ventilation

The two bedrooms upstairs have cross-ventilation and plenty of light. The larger bedroom across the front of the house, is intriguing with its delft blue background and white motif. This basic color will take almost any color of decoration. There are three windows hung with white chintz sprinkled with gay floral design.

The second bedroom which is slightly smaller in dimensions is a sunshine room with its paper of yellow background decorated with white diamond pattern. It is the type of room in which you want to hang white ruffled curtains and use maple furniture. This the decorator, Miss G. M. Park, has done with pleasing effect.

There is a generous linen closet in the upstairs hall. A light cream wall is employed on the upper wall of the glistening bathroom. A black and white tile border accentuates the wall treatment. And a black and white tile floor and blue window curtains give further life to the bathroom.

An admirable architectural scheme has been used in planning this excellently proportioned budget house.

Week's Permits Here Set Peak Of $2,372,900

Office Structure To Cost $1,500,000 Is Contemplated

Issuance last week by District Building Inspector John W. Oehmann's office of a permit for erection of a $1,500,000 office structure brought valuation of private building and repair work in Washington to $2,372,900, a week's high record for the current year.

Last week's figure marked an advance from $861,870, total of the preceding six-days period. During the past week, the building inspector's office approved permits providing for construction of 97 single-family dwellings and six apartment projects.

Permits issued by the office recently included these:

Home Mortgage Costs At New Low, Board Survey Shows

Home mortgage costs at new lows, show uniformity over the country and the market for homesites is improving. This remarkable degree of standardization shown in the thirty-fifth semiannual survey of the real estate market, by the National Association of Real Estate Boards, findings of which in respect to mortgage costs, demand-supply situation, building activity, and subdivision market are released. The survey found:

An undersupply of one-family dwellings exists in 47 per cent of the cities, while only 4 per cent have an oversupply. Condition remains about the same as it was six months ago, when 45 per cent showed undersupply. The smallest cities are the ones most frequently reporting shortage. The largest cities begin to report oversupply. Business-property demand exceeds supply in only 11 per cent of the cities and supply is in excess of demand in 25 per cent. Six months ago the figures were respectively 12 per cent and 24 per cent.

Home-mortgage costs are again lowest in history. Commonest interest rate for loans on new homes is 5 per cent. The 4½ per cent rate is dominant in only 22 per cent of the reporting cities, but six months ago it led in only 18 per cent of the cities. Decided feeling is shown that preference given to new homes in FHA financing has tended to depress prices for older properties.

The biggest cities have awakened their subdivision market. Seventy per cent of them have more movement now than a year ago in this field. Homesite buying is livelier than last year in 54 per cent of all the cities, receded in only 8 per cent. Home building in the reporting cities over the past six months is

4,483 New Houses Started in Second Week of July

There were more new homes started under Federal Housing Administration inspection in the week ended July 13 than in any similar period in that agency's history, Administrator Stewart McDonald announced yesterday. At the same time, applications for mortgage insurance covering new homes to be built under FHA inspection continued at levels far ahead of the comparable 1939 period.

During the second week in July, FHA-inspected construction began on 4,253 new homes which are being financed with loans insured under Title II of the National Housing Act. In addition, there were 230 homes started which are being financed with loans insured under Title I of the act.

There was a gain of 48 per cent over the 2,870 Title II homes started in the same week of 1939; no comparable figure is available for the number of Title I homes started for the same period, since FHA inspection was not then required. The 4,253 figure exceeded the previous

Construction is all brick. Other equipment and arrangement provides each six large closets, artistic light fixtures with ample floor plugs, sweet-toned chime doorbell, kitchen floor of Armstrong linoleum cemented over felt, solid brass hardware, table-top gas range with heat control, electric refrigerator, custom-built kitchen cabinet, electric clock, one-piece drainboard sink with strainer, stopper and swing nozzle. Many Ways to Protect New Neighborhoods

There are a number of ways by which new neighborhoods may be protected, according to authorities. Among these are:

Record suitable protective covenants in which owners of surrounding land have joined.

Limit entrances and discourage main through traffic.

Screen objectionable views and traffic.

River Terrace Project Opens New 'Family Size' Homes

Group of 12 In Northeast Ready to Show

Larger Residences In Big Developments Offer More Facilities

New "family size" homes, 20 feet in width, feature the latest section of the large River Terrace project in Northeast Washington, according to announcement by Davy & Murphy, developers of the great housing operation at Thirty-fourth street and Benning road northeast.

Thus far, most of the houses erected in this development, which will eventually be a small city of 1,000 families, have been approximately 15 feet wide. Now a group of 12 in the new addition is being presented, all of which are 20 feet wide and correspondingly larger.

Each of the dwellings in this latest group includes a large living room, bright dining room, fully equipped kitchen, three bedrooms, tiled bath and a full-sized basement of dimensions ample enough for a recreation room, if desired. Yards are adaptable for both front and rear gardening.

These new residences are priced as low as $5,100 and are available under Federal Housing Administration terms, for monthly payments as small as $33. This project already comprises 350 houses of Old English style of architecture.

Remove Wax Before Refinishing Floors

It is suggested that all wax be thoroughly removed before floors are refinished. If the floors were previously treated with the kind of wax that requires rubbing to polish it, the floor surface should be cleaned with turpentine or mineral spirits.

After the wax has softened, wipe it completely away. Then clean again with the solvent. If a non-rubbing wax has been used, a good household cleaner mixed with warm water should be sufficient to remove it.

Roof's Appearance Held Important

The roof of a house, in addition to almost all exterior parts, should be considered for appearance as well as durability, according to authorities.

The shingle roof is the most informal of all materials in common use. An all-wood structure almost demands this type of roof. Of the other common materials—composition shingle, tile, and slate—each has its own advantages. Composition shingles, which are lighter than tile or slate and available in a wide variety of colors, are often economical and practical. But roof colors such as red, dull orange, or old blue should be used with caution. Hues such as those are only effective when they are in harmony with the rest of the house, its trimmings, and the surroundings.

Use of roof tiles in strong unusual colors is effective with Spanish or Mediterranean type houses but are unsuited to the majority of American designs. Slate is a rugged material, generally higher in initial cost, but it is enduring and fireproof.

Proximity to Play Facilities Makes River Terrace Popular

Yacht Basin, Water Lily Gardens, Arboretum And Fishing Spots Are All in the Area; Nature Lovers May Enjoy Primitive Sites

One reason River Terrace, artistic community of low-cost homes in one of the fine Northeast areas, is so popular with many house buyers is its nearness to healthful recreational facilities.

Among these is the yacht basin in the Anacostia River, only a square or two away. This is the place where many yachting enthusiasts in the neighborhood keep their boats for sailing along the Potomac throughout the warm season.

Federal Government operations have transformed completely the Anacostia River from its state of primitive wildness. Government engineers have had its original swamps drained, eliminating their unsightliness. They have converted waste land into pretty fields and golf courses, and the reclamation project is continuing.

Part of the shore, a short distance north of River Terrace, will be retained in its natural condition as a refuge for birds. Lovers of trees and birds will be able to admire their beauty and study them in this haven for wild life across from the National Arboretum.

Another place of interest in the region is the Kenilworth, or formerly the W. B. Shaw, water lily gardens. They are not far removed from River Terrace and are becoming one of the most popular among the floral displays of the National Capital.

At the present time these tropical flowers are their prettiest. Among them are rare blue lilies, some of which bloom nocturnally and the fragrance of which can be detected a long way off.

The Anacostia River country presents every possibility for fishing, nature study, picknicking, boating and hiking. Present plans contemplate making it one of the finest places in the area for anglers.

Proper Width For Right of Way

Major tsreets in new residential subdivisions should have a right-of-way 60 feet or more in width and a paved roadway 34 feet or more in width, according to recommendations of the Federal Housing Administration.

Minor streets in new residential subdivisions should have a right-of-way 50 feet in width and a paved roadway 24 to 26 feet in width, walks 4 feet, and curbs and gutters where topography or market requires them.

For culs-de-sac, the right-of-way recommended is 40 feet; turnaround, 80 feet; length, 300 to 400 feet; paved roadway, 24 to 26 feet in width sidewalks, which can be next to curb, 4 feet.

Caring for Heating Plant Is Profitable

A profitable chore for the householder is preparing the home heating system. Flue passages should be cleaned, since deposits of soot and ashes collect moisture and cause rust. Owners of boilers should drain the water and burn a small fire for several minutes to dry the equipment.

The owner of an automatic coal stoker can prolong the life of the machine and prevent unnecessary trouble during cold weather by having the stoker cleaned and adjusted.

All coal should be taken from the "coal flow" tube and retort of bin-feet stokers, and from the hopper and retort of other stokers. The inside of the hopper should be repainted. The electrical control system also needs a checking-up for adjustment.

River Terrace Shop Center Nearly Ready

Benning Road Project To Have Six Stores And Gas Station

A new shopping center, including offices, six stores and a filling station, is amongthe many conveniences for residents of the River Terrace section. Nearly finished, the buildings probably will be ready for occupancy in another week.

The center is located at the entrance of this popular low-cost housing operation being developed by Davy & Murphy at Thirty-fourth street and Benning road northeast. The structure will be most attractive, with its facade of blue tile. Its commercial units will consist of a drug store, grocery, barber, valet and beauty shops, dairy products and hardware stores.

Office space will be occupied by River Terrace, Inc., builders of the structure, and professional men. A feature of the center will be a spacious parking area, so that this commercial nucleus will be able to cater to motorists along Benning road, as well as inhabitants of River Terrace.

The latter development will, in time, provide homes for 1,000 families who will find their shopping opportunities close at hand with no other commercial encroachment on the homelike atmosphere of their neighborhood. Work was started on the center several weeks ago and is being rushed to completion so that present residents of the locality may be able to buy groceries and other necessities within a short distance of their houses. Other commercial conveniences near River Terrace are located in the business district at Fifteenth and H streets northeast.

Insulation Cools House

Insulation in the walls and top oor ceiling of an average house will keep it from 10 to 12 degrees cooler than outdoors at midday during the peak of summer heat, the National Mineral Wool Association reports.

AND NOW.....A

FAMILY SIZE HOME IN THE LOW-COST FIELD!

IF you are familiar with low cost homes in this region, you know that most of them are far too small, and too far out of town. Most people will welcome this announcement of a big "Family Size" Home. It's 20 feet wide. You can get some idea of the large amount of space in it from the 8 rooms pictured below. We call this home the Mansionette. It's the largest home we have ever built here; and easily the best value in the region at $5,100. The low price is the result of mass purchasing and building in our huge 1,000 home program. Take a ride out this way today and see the Mansionette. You'll agree there's no need for anyone to buy a small home. No need to spend a lifetime in cramped quarters . . . no need to waste countless hours in traffic tangles every day trying to reach some poorly located home. River Terrace is just 10 minutes from downtown—in the District. Easy to reach . . . Easy to buy . . . and above all: Easy to Live In.

Plenty of closets, an abundance of electrical outlets in all rooms. Electric door bell, built-in aerial. Five-room homes at only $4,650 also have these features. Recreation rooms are unfinished.

Views of Indian Spring Club and Surrounding Community Seen From Air

These air views of Indian Spring Club Estates give a striking portrayal of the growth of this community on the rolling fairways of this Maryland country club. With more than 125 already sold, work is being continued on the first 200 of a scheduled 400 detached air-conditioned homes to be erected there by the Kay D evelopment Co. In taking part of the golf course for the development, the builders retained a complete nine-hole links, with the clubhouse and all its facilities remaining intact as an added feature of the residential community

Golf Course Becomes Home Community

Kay Company Builds Nearly 200 Houses In Indian Spring Site

Half of what was once the 18-hole golf course of Indian Spring Club now has become a town of nearly 200 new homes as the Kay Development Co. continues its large housing project on the grounds of this country club.

A complete nine-hole course remains, together with the clubhouse and all its facilities, contributing a unique feature to community life in the development, known as Indian Spring Club Estates.

One of the interesting features of this project is the fact that its houses were built directly on the golf course, so that in many cases the front lawns of residences were former fairways and many of the erstwhile sand traps have become the basements of the dwellings.

In commenting on the remarkable progress that has been made at Indian Spring Club Estates, A. S. Kay yesterday said:

"The growth of this development, which in a few months has become a very well-rounded community, indicates that people more and more are showing a desire to live away from the noise and hurry of the city areas. Indian Spring Club is only a short drive from the heart of the city, yet it is far enough out in the country so that the environment is truly suburban. Here residents have all the freedom, fresh air and scenic advantages of the real country. The rolling greensward forms a most attractive background for homes such as we are building.

"Despite so many advantages, the prices of our homes are well within the reach of families of modest means."

Mr. Kay stated that work is now in progress in opening a new section of the development, and these homes, which also will sell at $6,000 and $6,500, will be on the market in a short time.

Basement Makes Good Game Room

Tasks of repairing and modernizing the home should begin "at the bottom of the house and work up," advise engineers.

"The No. 1 item on any modernization program should be the rehabilitation of the basement, giving the family more space to live in," they explain. "Nothing adds so much to the average family's pleasure as the adding of a game room, or other recreation quarters, downstairs.

"Of course no basement is truly modern until an automatic 'fireman' has been installed to take over the job of stoking the furnace. Especially adapted to the modern basement is the coal-flow type of stoker, which carries the coal automatically from the bin. With this type of installation, the feed bin can be completely enclosed and dust-tight."

Bathroom Colors

A bathroom color scheme both artistic and practical has walls painted jade and plumbing fixtures to match. The floor is covered with linoleum in black and cream-colored squares, with black border and inner border of beige to match the shower curtains.

Device Can 'Measure' Air Seeping Into Room

The National Bureau of Standards has developed equipment for measuring the volume of air infiltered through window and door-clearance openings due to wind pressure, it has been announced recently. The work was undertaken as part of its program for the study of materials and structures suitable for low-cost house construction.

Leakage of cold air into a building through loosely fitted windows and doors, it is pointed out, may have a pronounced effect on the heating-load requirements for the building.

Caustic Potash Will Clear Drains

Clogged drains are nearly always the result of careless disposal of waste materials. A strong solution of caustic potash (potassium hydroxide) and hot water poured through a drain will eat or burn away the average obstruction and dissolve greases. An occasional flushing with any of the commercial solvents will help to keep drains open.

Color Accents in Blue

A tiny country house, surfaced in weathered shingles and cloistered among apple trees and lilac bushes, receives its color accents from blue-painted door and window frames. A blue wheelbarrow under one of the apple trees beside the house echoes the same color.

French-Style Furniture Has Versatility

It Can Express Many Moods, Blend With Alien Pieces

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

There is a particularly poignant appeal about French furniture these days as the France that created it—the France we knew and loved stands, with bowed head, at the end of an era. What kind of France will arise on the ashes of the old regime no one can tell. We can only glance back to the past for reassurance, finding there an indomitable spirit, a fortitude, a character which has always given out so much more than it has absorbed. All this, along with the graciousness of France, is expressed in French furniture and decorative arts, which are probably the most universal of any styles except perhaps the Chinese.

In Our Affections

The basic affinity of the Americans for the French way of life is, of course, the source of our affection for French furniture. Not only the consummate beauty of the court furniture originating in Paris, but the simple livable charm of provincial furniture lures us. For with all its beauty it has a French practicality, and functionalism which might not appear at a glance but is there none the less.

But like most of the things any nation imports, we have translated French furnishings into an American idiom when we brought them over to our shores. I don't mean the careless liberties we have sometimes taken in reproductions; I'm thinking of more legitimate adaptations such as the blending of a few French pieces with English and American pieces of the eighteenth century. Such as the use of French accessories and bibelots with furniture of other heritage or even in modern settings. Such as the use of modern colors, modern ornaments, modern fabrics with French furniture. These uses of decorative inheritances from France are what really make them our own.

Certainly there is nothing wrong, if you prefer, in having an authentic French room, with every detail exactly in period, but this would never be anything but an imported scene, beautiful, certainly, but never quite at home. We have already done that too often, and sometimes we've overdone the froth, forgetting that behind all the frivolity and elegance there was probably as sound a structural conception of furniture as has ever been evolved, that behind the ornamental delicacy of the porcelains and fabrics was quality and technique rarely equalled anywhere in the world. And so it is wise to think over the details of a French room rather carefully before tearing out and buying yards of this and bolts of that.

The formal elegant type of French room takes a lot of living up to; it wants rare brocades, expensive velvets, fine paintings, Aubusson rugs if possible, objects d'art of museum quality. So don't attempt such a room if you're ging to have to stint. Unless your French furniture is actually gilded and very grand, it can probably be used far more effectively in a provincial type of room.

The term provincial is in this instance misleading, for it implies a rural primitive feeling that we don't mean. The term is here used simply as a convenience to distinguish the palatial room from that of a prosperous home of comfort and dignity. It has all the gracious charm of the French pattern of life without the kingly airs—that's all the difference.

The type of French provincial room that we're thinking of would use chintzes, either flowered or of scenic pattern. Or it might be combined with novel modern textures in fabrics and rugs. It might lean toward a stanch domestic atmosphere, well filled with little treasures and keepsakes, and small patterned wallpapers and fabrics. Or it might be spacious and serene with a smartly monotone background.

The accessories with French furniture might come from hither and yon and be interesting together because of their very cosmopolitan heterogeny. Or they might be sleek and sophisticated, all white porcelain and copper, perhaps, or else entirely of modern crystal.

Colors with French furniture can be charmingly traditional, faded, genteel, stuffy. Or they can be very modern, stimulating, bold. Don't be afraid to think adventurously about French furniture; like France herself it seems to fraternize genially with all the currents of design. Maybe because it is the blending of all these elements which have met in France and become a art of that most universal country.

A Mistaken Idea

Yet, curiously, there seems to have been many inhibitions restraining us from combining French furniture with other things. This mistaken idea that it must be used "straight" has resulted in many an unimaginative, even dreary room.

We haven't felt the same limitations about French accessories and ornaments. French fabric patterns, simply because they have been used so widely, adapted so freely that few of us realize how many French details there are in the average American room. We're missing a lot if we don't recognize in French furniture the sama versatility.

Street in Airline Village, new Virginia project of semidetached houses built by Fern Development Corporation and presented by the Aurora Hills office

Airline Village Offers Well-Built, Low-Cost Homes

A new community known as Airline Village has been started by Fern Development Corporation, in Aurora Hills, Va. Each of its homes contains five rooms, full basement, two bedrooms, bath, living and dining rooms and kitchen, offering desirable living quarters to persons having budgets of under $50.

The project is situated within 10 minutes drive of downtown Washington and in the 10-cent bus fare zone. It is also near National Airport and its administration buildings. It is convenient to a building on Main boulevard which may be occupied by the Civil Aeronautics Agency.

The neighborhood is a select one and built up with many attractive homes. Shopping center, churches and a school are nearby. Roads are hard surfaced and a large amount of open land affords recreational facilities. The corporation has completed many houses which are ready for occupancy. The model house, furnished by Williamsburg's Studio, is open from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. daily. These homes have been approved and insured by the Federal Housing Administration, it is announced.

Unusual Home Colors

Unusual and modern are the colors combined in a model house in a New York department store. In the bedroom, walls painted pale lime color are quartered by white bands. The shaggy worsted carpet is deep wine color, and the furniture is coated with black lacquer.

Tremont Tract Sells 65 Homes In Four Weeks

More Than 150 Houses Will Be Erected; 60 Already Under Way

Sixty-five sales in less than four weeks is the record which has been made in Tremont Gardens, new low-cost home development on Lee highway, just beyond Falls Church, Va., it was announced yesterday by Mac-Lindsey, exclusive agent for Tremont Gardens Properties.

More than 150 houses are to be erected in the development. Some 60 already are under construction. They are of the bungalow type, with living room, full dining room, two bedrooms, bath, kitchen and utility room on one floor.

Four types are available in the development. It is the intention of the developer to vary the elevations on the houses, with the different plans, so that the eye-appeal of the project will be enhanced.

To reach Tremont Gardens, drive over Key or Memorial bridges, out Lee highway or Lee boulevard past Falls Church to the intersection of these roads and continue about a mile to property.

Small Home Interior Can Be Different

Interiors of small homes can represent a departure from convention, according to experts. While extravagantly furnished interiors are out of the question in this class of dwelling, they should be planned and decorated and furnished with definite reason and in a distinctive character.

A kitchen designed to make the housewife's days more cheerful has walls painted a pale clear yellow bordered with black woodwork. The floor covering is linoleum in a black and cream checked pattern.

Color Harmony

A living room with walls and woodwork painted soft green is relieved by the pleasant contrast of eggplant color. The chintz floral pattern draperies have an eggplant background and the rug is in two tones of eggplant.

FHA-Inspected Homes Set Record

record of 4,125 set in the week ended May 11. The highest week reached in 1939 was the period ended July 22 at 3,122.

McDonald attributed the record number of homes started in the week partly to work being held back by the July Fourth holiday, but chiefly to the sustained high level of FHA insuring operations.

During the same week, there were 4,680 applications for mortgage insurance involving new homes to be built under FHA inspection. This compared with 3,397 in the same week of 1939 and with the 1939 record of 4,268 at the end of March. The gain over the corresponding week of 1939 was 38 per cent.

McDonald explained that applications involving new homes have topped 1939 for every one of the last 20 weeks and have substantially exceeded 4,000 each week with the exception of the two holidays. The highest week was 5,342 in the period ended May 4.

"In view of the fact that 1939 was the largest year in our experience and also the biggest for residential construction since 1929, this record of undiminished demand for new homes makes it virtually certain that 1940 will exceed 1939 by a considerable margin and will approximate the 1928 level for single-family homes," McDonald said. "Our figures have remained almost steady in the face both of world conditions and of the normal expectation of a summer lull."

Use of Cheap Paint Unwise

It is not only impractical but almost impossible to save money by buying very cheap paint, say authorities. In the long run, cheap paint will actually cost more. Figures furnished by the paint industry's research laboratory are used to prove this fact.

A home which receives a "cheap" paint job may find the paint is scaling off, cracking, and unable to resist the weather after a year and a half. The painter is called in and points out that the house must be "unpainted" before it can be repainted. By this he means that the scaled paint must be burned or scraped off at an added cost.

On the other hand, the home owner who used good quality paint finds his property still in good condition after two years' wear. Further, the good paint won't scale off. Instead, it wears down by gradual chalking, leaving a perfect surface for new paint. No burning and scraping will be necessary at repainting time, and no new priming coat will have to be applied. In this case the use of inferior paint would actually mean an added expense instead of the hoped for saving.

Home Mortgages Reach New Low

going on only at the rate of 12 detached dwellings per 10,000 of population. The survey covers 256 typical cities in every section of the country. It is compiled from confidential reports by the association's local member boards.

Asked to report the commonest rate at which loans are now being made on new moderately priced homes, exactly half the cities say it is 5 per cent and 62 cities out of every 100 cite a rate no higher than 5 per cent, while 75 cities out of 100 give a rate no higher than 5½ per cent and 96 out of every 100 list a rate no higher than 6 per cent.

Less than a fourth of the cities (23 out of every 100), any longer have the old 6 per cent rate as the commonest. And only 2 cities out of 100 have interest costs for the ordinary home buyer as high as 6½ per cent. These are all cities of under 25,000 population and all in the Southeast, South Central or Southwest regions. For the first time in the history of these surveys not one city reports any rate higher than 6½ per cent.

Mortgage-money supply is the best in real estate history, the survey shows. Every city of over 200,000 population reports capital available in excess of loans—though sometimes it is seeking only FHA-insured loans. Competition of lending agencies for loans has in places reached the point where some insurance companies are paying 1 per cent to 2 per cent commissions for loans, and only 4 per cent of all the cities, and those all small communities, have loans hunting capital.

This is only half as many as was the case six months ago. But in one-fifth of the cities of the country the home buyer ordinarily still pays 6 per cent for his money, the association's sampling shows. In 22 cities out of 100 he now can get financing at 4½ per cent, but there is only one city in 100 where 4 per cent money is commonly available.

New England has made the greatest spurt of any region of the country as compared with a year ago, with 65 per cent of its reporting cities showing higher real estate market activity, not a one down in either sales volume or prices.

D. C. Housing Shortage Held Probable

Builder Says Influx Of Workers in Defense Plan Expected Here

Unfolding of the Nation's vast defense program necessitating daily addition of large numbers of Government employes, without a commensurate increase in housing facilities, is most likely to bring a return to Washington of the turbulent days of the World War period and several years thereafter, in the opinion of Don A. Loftus, president of Permanesque Homes Village, Inc., developers of Beverley Hills, Alexandria, Va.

Shortage of housing and consequent boosting of rents reached such a condition that Congress had to step in and pass first the Saulsbury Rent and Anti-Eviction Act and later the Ball Rent Act, Mr. Loftus explained.

"I am not prepared to say what is going to happen here in the near future," he continued, "but the analogy between the present situation and that of the period between 1918 and 1925 is perfectly plain. It has been estimated that during the World War period the population of Washington increased by at least 150,000. While conditions now are not the same as they were 23 years ago, there are similar fundamental aspects. Manifestly, it is the purpose of the Government, backed by the universal demand of the American people, to put this Nation in a condition where it can meet defensively any power or combination of powers that exist in the world.

"In terms of personnel then," Mr. Loftus went on, "it is well within the bounds of reason to assume that Washington's immediate increase in population will at least closely approximate that of the war period. Already, in fact, some restlessness is being felt over the housing and rent situation.

"It will be recalled that for more than a year after the beginning of our entry into the World War rents were skyrocketed in Washington and strife existed between landlords and tenants. As a result the Saulsbury rent control and anti-eviction resolution was signed by President Wilson May 31, 1918. The effects of this legislation was not entirely satisfactory to all segments of the public and it was succeeded by the Ball Rent Act which created a rent commission to act on the complaints of landlords and tenants. In 1924, however, a ruling by the Supreme Court, while not killing the act, put an end to its usefulness. Throughout the entire period from 1917 to 1925 housing conditions in Washington were unsatisfactory with disputes between landlords and tenants constantly in progress.

"It is hoped that conditions in Washington will not reach the sorry state of affairs that existed in the previous national crisis," Mr. Loftus continued, "but I am sure that a housing shortage will be the inevitable outcome of the present great influx of defense workers in Washington."

Asked if he thought present conditions might not act as a spur to a greater amount of home building in Washington and vicinity, Mr. Loftus said: "I am sure it will, and most assuredly it should. It certainly behooves those who are not now home owners to buy or build. Then, if higher rents come along, they will be completely protected."

Living Room Charm

In keeping with the classic and modern combination now so smart in interior decoration, a blending of eighteenth century pieces gives additional charm to a pastel living room. In this room the painted walls, draperies and rug are in tones of yellow gold, the marbleized dado is slate blue and soft rose.

Large, Brassy Doorknobs No Longer in Good Taste

Tastes in finished hardware for houses has changed materally, just as taste in most other parts of the houses have changed. The elaborately "decorative" embossed combination knob and key plates and large conspicuous brass butts, or hinges that protrude into the room in an important manner are no longer aufait.

It is no longer a crime to paint these butts. In fact, for inside work, small, unobtrusive steel or iron butts prepared for paint are now commonly used and painted with the doors. Hardware has "gone period," and in English, Spanish, or Italian houses we demand wrought iron, either with a semipolished finish or possibly a rust finish, to give the appearance of age.

In colonial houses we range from the wrought-iron thumb latches that our humbler ancestors beat out on the anvil for their little cottages to the exquisite brass and silver cutwork plates with their graceful drop handles of the manor houses of the gentry. In between are the various types of iron spring latches exposed on the surface of the thin doors they used and the same locks with iron or brass boxes to cover their 'innards" htat our nicer progenitors preferred. When thicker doors were used, mortised locks their "innards" that our nicer prooval brass knobs with neat brass rings or rosettes, to cover the hole in the door. With these, smple brass key holes were inserted in the wood —the whole giving a restrained, refined appearance.

All these styles have been revived and are used somewhat too indiscriminately. Try to keep your periods in hardware straight; you should no more put old English wrough-iron locks on a Dutch colonial house that you should put green blinds with owl cut-outs on an English manor house.

Forced Circulation Of Air Cools Home

Some cooling effect and considerable summer comfort result from forced air circulation within a house during the summer, according to the recently revised booklet, "Mechanical Equipment for the Home."

"The forced circulation of air," explains the booklet, "induces rapid evaporation of body perspiration and may be accomplished by the use of individual fans in the various rooms or by installation of a large attic fan for forcing heated air out of the house, or it may be used to draw cool air from the basement or from out-of-doors at night after the air has cooled, thus providing a house full of cool air for the next day."

Along this line, the booklet also reports that in hot, dry climates considerable temperature reduction may be accomplished by wetting roofs with water, which prevents heat storage in the roof, while the evaporation of the water extracts heat from the structure.

Summer air-conditioning and cooling for homes is only one of the many subjects discussed in the revised pamphlet, which reviews the latest technical developments in the mechanical field. The FHA prepares and publishes this bulletin in the hope that such information may help buyers to exercise wise selection.

Closed Plumbing Winning Favor

It has taken a long time to overcome the old selling point of "open plumbing," but at last the public has become less suspicious of anything that closes in the piping beneath a lavatory or kitchen sink, and the manufacturers, taking advantage of this wearing down of prejudice have come out with lavatories that look like cabinets with doors below the basin that open up and disclose a nice big medicine cabinet or place for linen or soiled clothes hamper. In these days when architects search out every available inch of space as Diogenes sought for his honest man, this gain is a real one.

The Week In Business

Getting the most mileage and motoring satisfaction from each dollar's worth of gasoline not only is good cheer for car owners but it is good business for service stations. That is the reason Gulf Oil Corporation has published a clearly illustrated new booklet entitled "21 Ways to Save Money" and is distributing free copies at its stations from Maine to Mexico.

How to save gasoline in starting, running, and stopping in both hot and cold weather, how to use the choke most economically, and even how to save money when stopped, is explained in the booklet. In addition to tips on saving gasoline, it tells how to keep auto expense at a minimum through proper tire pressure, correct lubrication, proper care of brakes, avoiding traffic fines, and other valuable information to economically-minded persons.

Leary Salesman Wins Award

Word has been received here from Charles L. Jacobson, vice president and general sales manager of the Chrysler sales division, Chrysler Corporation, that Robert F. Miller, salesman for the H. B. Leary, Jr. & Bros. Co., has won membership in the Chrysler 100 Club. This club comprises the 100 retail salesmen who sold the most cars in the year from July 1, 1939, to June 30, 1940. Because of the excellent sales year the corporation has had, competition was unusually keen and the total of sales required to qualify was the highest in the six-year history of the club.

Membership in the club entitles Mr. Miller to participate in the annual outing given by the corporation's factory. This year it is known as an "International Fun Fest," because much of the time will be spent in Canada. The itinerary calls for assembling in Washington today, a day of sightseeing tomorrow, with a trip to Montreal by special train tomorrow evening. The club will spend Tuesday in Montreal and the following two days on a steamer trip down the St. Lawrence River and up the Saguenay.

The tourists will return to Quebec on Thursday evening and will spend Friday sightseeing in and around that picturesque city. Friday evening will see the climax of the tour in the annual "citation dinner."

Sleepy Stocks Close Week Still in Rut

Minor Moves Tend Irregularly Lower In Torpid Trade

By the Associated Press

New York, July 20.—The stock market muddled through another lackadaisical session today and finished the week with an irregularly lower trend.

Price changes, however, were inconsequential for the most part and were rendered more or less meaningless by the fact that the turnover was the smallest for any Saturday in more than two years.

Brokers again attributed apathy mainly to the desire of speculative forces to keep fairly well in the clear pending further European war developments, particularly a possible attempt of Hitler to make good his latest threat to destroy England if the British refuse to make peace.

Let-Down Anticipated

The business outlook remained as a moderate market prop, although there was talk here and there of a nearby let-down as a prelude to the broadening of defense spending. Foreign affairs, on the whole, tended to obscure the political scene at home, with Wall Street inclined to withhold definite opinions on the Presidential race until the campaign gets farther along.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was off .1 of a point, but on the week showed a net advance of .2. Transfers of 111,220 shares compared with 124,030 last Saturday, touching a low mark for a 2-hour stretch since June 18, 1938. Owing to two fairly lively days, the week's aggregate of 1,634,720 shares bettered that of the preceding week by around 100,000 shares.

Among stocks underwater at the close were Bethlehem Steel, Youngstown Sheet, General Motors, Chrysler, United States Rubber, Montgomery Ward, United Aircraft, Douglas Aircraft, American Telephone, Westinghouse, Union Carbide, Pennsylvania and Loft.

Modest Gains Few

Emerging with modest improvement were United States Steel, Woolworth, du Pont, Kennecott, North American, Chesapeake & Ohio, Standard Oil of New Jersey and General Electric.

Receiving a little market consideration were: Forecasts next week's steel mill operations would register a mild increase; an upturn in last week's department store sales over the 1939 week, and additional expansion in residential building throughout the country.

Lower by fractions in the curb were Cities Service, Glen Alden Coal, Phoenix Securities and Niagara Hudson Power. Dealings here amounted to approximately 23,000 shares against 34,000 a week ago.

Axis Bonds Strong

Axis power bonds advanced today and British Empire issues declined as the two belligerents moved into what may prove to be the final phase of the war.

Comparatively lively business developed in the foreign section while traders allowed domestic corporates to follow narrow price routes in slip-shod fashion.

Foreign gainers of fractions to more than a point included German 5½s of '65 at 17¾ and 7s of '49 at 21¾, Denmark 6s at 34½, Italy 7s at 49⅞ and Milan 6½s at 32¼.

Queensland 7s broke 6¾ to 76¼ on transfers of 4 bonds, Australia 4½s lost nearly 2 at 41⅛ and New South Wales 5s dipped ½ to 48.

United States Treasuries appeared on the ticker tape languidly at declines running to ¼ point.

Commodities

New York, July 20 (AP).—The Associated Press commodity index dipped this week to the lowest level since September 5 in a third consecutive weekly decline.

The index, based on 1926 as 100, dropped to 70.23 from 71.09 a week ago. A year ago the index, based on an average of 35 wholesale staples in cash markets and adjusted for seasonal and long-term trends, stood at 64.31.

With the exception of rubber, almost every component staple of the index declined.

Rubber rose sharply. Dealers said the price recently set by the Government at which reserve supplies of the crude material would be bought by a Government-created agency acted as a check against decline.

Wheat gave mainly under the weight of huge supplies and a cloudy outlook for distribution. Corn and oats followed suit, although rye advanced.

Cotton sales in the South were curbed by the unwillingness of mills generally to take on additional large supplies of the staple. Anticipated broad sales of cloth failed to materialize. Foods such as eggs, sugar, butter and other dairy products declined as wholesalers assessed surpluses hanging over the market.

A decline in flour was associated with receding wheat prices. Cocoa responded with lower prices to reports of unexpectedly large shipments despite war dangers. Lard fell back in the face of estimates consumption for the marketing year ended September 30 would establish a record high.

Others marked down included tin, silk, wool, cattle, linseed oil, turpentine and coal.

The index with its components compared as follows:

Cotton Futures

New York, July 20 (AP).—A steady trickle of hedging sales wore away prices in the cotton futures market today. Final losses of 1 to 5 points put the list at the lows for the week.

Selling was encouraged by a lower trend at Bombay and a less unfavorable view of crop weather conditions. Hedgings was said to be against both foreign and domestic growths.

Principal support came in trade buying on the way down. While spasmodic activity developed, dealers reported turnover subnormal.

Most traders took the view that the future course of events abroad was too obscure to allow broad-scale speculative interest.

Worth street cloth business was small and brokers were disappointed at the smallness of the week's turnover. Prices, however, held steady.

Flow of Defense Contracts Into Industry Estimated at $1,000,000,000 Since July 1

Much of Work Still In Blue-Print Stage As Backlogs Rise

By the Associated Press

New York, July 20.—Defense orders piled up more work for American industry this week as many factories operated at the highest levels since 1929.

Government contracts for shipways, ammunition and fuel storage facilities, barracks, explosives plants, machine shop extensions at Navy Yards and other defense projects sent the weekly total of construction awards compiled by the Engineering News-Record to the highest yet recorded by the trade publication.

Engineering awards, according to the publication's weekly report, amounted to $170,834,000 in the continental United States, plus $7,000,000 in United States possessions.

The awards were nearly three times the total for the corresponding week last year. Some projects will require a year or more to complete, thus adding to the growing backlog of future expenditures for materials, pay rolls and machines.

Billion in Contracts

All told, it was estimated, more than $1,000,000,000 in Army and Navy contracts for building, materials and other needs have been distributed to scores of industrial concerns since July 1.

While much of this work remained in the blue print stage, with actual expenditures weeks or months away, the combined United States and British outlay for arms was counted the greatest influence behind the climb in business indices.

Resuming its rise after a minor dip the previous week, the Associated Press Index of Industrial Activity advanced to a new peak since January. This measurement of factory operations has moved up 10 out of the past 11 weeks to the highest July figure in a decade.

Auto Output Drops

Trade sources estimated automobiles declined to 53,020 units from 65,176 the previous week and 53,128 in the like 1939 week. But statistical adjustment was made in the index to allow for the unusually early shift to production of new models this year.

Output of old models has been curtailed while producers tool up in preparation for turning out 1941 models. Meanwhile, retail motor sales were described as "highly encouraging," with prospect July sales might upset the normal trend by surpassing the June showing.

Iron Age reported the British Purchasing Commission planned to place weekly orders for 100,000 to 150,000 tons of steel with American mills. Steel operations remained above 86 per cent of capacity compared with about 56 a year ago, although some flattening in new orders was noticed.

Stock Trade Feeble

In contrast with rising industrial barometers and the swollen background of construction contracts, speculation in Wall street moved at a feeble gait. Stocks remained wedged in a rut. Bonds, however, made slow progress on the upside.

The reluctance of traders to buy on business news, ordinarily the main driving force behind the market, was explained by brokers as attributable partly to expectation Federal tax boosts would absorb much of the prospective profit gains.

What part, if any, the nomination of President Roosevelt for a third term by the Democratic Convention played in Wall Street calculations was difficult to appraise in the outwardly indifferent market place.

The waiting strategy seemed to be influenced by an urge to hold off trading pending the threatened Nazi blow against England.

"This is a period in which business is better than sentiment," commented Business Week.

The publication noted stock and commodity markets for several weeks have "shown little inclination to take seriously the rising level of profits of American corporations or the rising level of consumption which must inevitably flow from the country's rapidly developing defense expenditures."

The magazine suggested the market's contrary mood might be based on the theory that the higher the industrial curve climbs, the sooner and farther it would fall in event of a sudden shock, such as a knockout blow against England, or if defense spending fails to catch hold as quickly as many expected.

Week's Industrial Index

The Associated Press industrial index, with component groups based on latest data, calculated on 1929-30 levels at 100, compared as follows:

ICC Approves Boston & Maine Bond Revision

By the Associated Press

The Interstate Commerce Commission approved yesterday a plan of the Boston & Maine Railroad readjusting its bonded indebtedness.

The readjustment will reduce the fixed bond interest charge of the railroad by almost one-half.

The plan gives consenting bondholders 50 per cent of their holdings in new 20-year 4 per cent fixed interest bonds and 50 per cent in new 4½ 30-year income bonds in exchange for their present holdings, most of which bear 5 per cent interest and all of which provide for fixed interest payments.

The I. C. C. authorized the Boston & Maine to borrow $40,750,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in connection with the readjustment plan.

Weather News Drops Wheat And Cotton

Corn Futures Also Dip On Scattered Rains, Forecasts of More

By the Associated Press

Wheat and cotton declined in futures markets yesterday. Weather and crop conditions displaced other considerations as price movers.

At Chicago wheat lost ½ to 1½ cents a bushel and corn dipped ¼ to ¾ of a cent. Scattered showers and forecast of more to come, with possible abatement of the present heat wave, inspired selling.

Cotton at New York slipped 5 to 25 cents a bale. Bearishly construed weather news was the most important factor.

Supplies of livestock at Chicago were too small to test prices after the week's decline.

The Associated Press weighted index of 36 wholesale spot commodities, based on 1926 as 100, hit a new low for the year at 70.06. This compared with 70.23 Friday.

Food Prices Hit Highest Levels Since July, 1938

New York, July 20 (AP).—A 1.4 per cent increase in the cost of food was responsible largely for a rise of 0.5 percent in wage earners' living costs in June, the National Industrial Conference Board reported today.

Food prices, said the report, reached the highest level since July, 1938, were 4.9 per cent above those in June a year ago and 33.7 per cent above the depression low of March, 1933.

The dollar's purchasing value, as against 100 cents in 1923, was 115.7 cents last month.

Clothing prices and sundries remained unchanged from May to June, said the report, which stated rentals and coal prices each rose 0.1 per cent in June.

Majestic Settles Taxes

Chicago, July 20 (AP).—Federal Judge William H. Holly today approved an agreement between the district attorney's office and the Majestic Radio & Television Corporation in the settlement of the concern's taxes.

Trade Expects Steady Prices For Used Cars

Disillusionment Waits Owners Anticipating Better 'Trade-ins'

By David J. Wilkie,
Associated Press Automotive Editor.

Detroit, July 20.—If you think that because 1941 model automobiles are likely to be higher in price the trade-in value of your last year's model will go up correspondingly you're in for disillusionment. The sales division of the industry has plenty of second-hand cars, and price increases don't work that way.

A better way to appraise the outlook for both new and used units, say authoritative sources, is to expect the individual buyer to have to pay more for the used vehicle as well as the factory delivered car after the 1940 model output is completed.

This analysis of prospects for at least the early months of the 1941 season is based on the assumption in trade circles as well as among neutral observers that the automobile manufacturers, engaged in the most competitive business in the world, will increase list prices only to the extent necessary to cover added production costs.

Boosts Retard Demand

There is nothing especially altruistic about this attitude on the part of the motorcar manufacturer. His experience generally over the last decade has been that price increases retard new-car demand. At the same time the car maker has learned that if increases are to be made the time likely to occasion the least disturbance to an upward buying movement is at the end of one season or the beginning of a new one.

Whatever sales resistance might develop from announcement of a boost in prices usually dissolves before the initial inspection of the new models, always improved in "eye appeal" for just that purpose. The sales division also has opportunity at the beginning of the season to stress certain engineering advancements as justification for higher prices.

Used car stocks continue heavy but the merchandisers are not worrying a great deal at this time. They figure that regardless of the new car situation as to price schedules, an expanding demand for used cars will develop with the increased employment expected to result from the stepping up of factory activity that will result from war munitions output and the effort at the same time to continue normal manufacturing processes.

Official sales reports and the field surveys of the various manufacturers indicate that the heavy inventory of new car stocks that occasioned so much concern a month or more ago are rapidly dwindling under sustained buyer demand. By the time the 1941 model season is in full swing there will be mighty few of the current models unsold. Certainly there will be no "bargain" sales from present indications.

Seasonal Letdown Noted in Steel Buying

Cleveland, July 20 (AP).—Daily Metal Trade says some slackening has been noted in buying of finished steel products, largely reflecting suspensions or declining operations at automotive plants.

"It is not viewed with any alarm," the trade publication declared today, "since it reflects a seasonal letdown which shortly will give way to new purchasing by automotive interests. Meanwhile, considerable steel is being booked for defense purposes and export demand, chiefly British, is being entertained."

Government Fails to Practice Its Own Financial Gospel

By Merryle Rukeyser

Public opinion has been changing in the United States as to the character of financial accounting expected from private corporations.

Some executives have gone even further in improving standards than the rules of the regulatory SEC require. For example, in some instances management has declined to name outside auditors to check up on it, but has instead asked a committee of stockholders or outside directors to take the responsibility for making a selection.

It is significant that, though the Federal Government through reform legislation and administrative rulings has recognized the changing public opinion and has accordingly required increasingly austere standards on the part of private corporations, it has not uniformly practiced, in Federally owned corporations, the new gospel which it preached. On the contrary, accounting procedure of the Government itself and of Government-owned corporations has been inconsistent and somewhat obsolete, creating the semblance of a double standard of morality.

In this spirit, the third term issue is itself irrelevant. The hitherto unbroken custom of limiting one administration to a maximum of eight years has had the biproduct advantage of bringing in a new leadership to check up on the retiring officials and in a broad moral sense audit the books. Thus, from this viewpoint, political change serves the purpose of an independent audit.

The forthcoming election will test whether in this business civilization in which we live the business label is a handicap or an asset in the competition for political preferment.

War and heightened defense preparations are raising new problems of the national economy. They are altering the economic climate in which we all work, save and invest.

They require new adjustments and increasing alertness.

In regard to meeting the cost of mobilization for war, a prominent businessman hazards the opinion:

"Taxation is not treated specifically in the industrial mobilization plan. The answer to your question must therefore be sought in our own experience during the first World War, and in British experience during the second World War, as well as in the present tax program for meeting the cost of national defense.

"Corporations not only paid higher income taxes but were subjected for the first time to new kinds of taxation in the first World War. On top of the regular income tax, special taxes were levied on munition makers and on corporations that accumulated unreasonable profits. Brokers, pawnbrokers, custom house brokers, owners of theaters, concert halls, circuses, bowling alleys, billiard parlors, makers of cigars, cigarettes and tobacco—all had to pay special occupational taxes. For the first time an excess profits tax was imposed. Taken together, all these taxes showed how vast a proportion of the total cost of war must be borne by corporations. In the light of recent events in Britain and now in the United States, you may well anticipate a repetition in any future war.

"Do not conclude, however, that there will be no profits at all. The Government merely wants to be sure that no corporation will profit excessively from its war work. England found it necessary to place a 100 per cent tax on all excess profits, and there is reason to believe that the United States, if it went to war, would find a similar tax necessary."

The real problem in war is not to avoid excess profits, but through prudent setting up of reserves against excessive obsolescence, against post-war inventory deflation, and sudden drying up of orders to prevent a reversal from putting enterprises spectacularly into red ink, if not into bankruptcy.

Chamber President Asks Congress to Help Industry

By the Associated Press

The United States Chamber of Commerce urged yesterday that Congress, as a defense measure, remove Government controls "which act as a brake on our industrial machines."

James S. Kemper, chamber president, in a public statement to 800,000 businessmen members, said that Congress should:

"1. Take immediate steps to eliminate unnecessary public expenditures.

"2. Eliminate present handicaps to the production of essential war materials on an economical basis.

"3. Remove obstacles which tend to block industrial initiative and retard productive effort."

"Business is ready and willing to do its part in meeting any national problem," Kemper said. "Congress and the Government's administrative agencies can facilitate the progress of the preparedness program. The time to do it is now."

There is need, the chamber said, for encouragement for new capital investment in defense plants, a comprehensive, long-term revision of the tax structure, modification of labor legislation "which now prevents cordial employer-employe relations," vigilance against subversive elements, assurances that the rearmament program will be carried on "competently and within the dimensions of our free enterprise system," and that labor, agriculture and business unite against "all dictatorial trends."

Heavy Steel Scrap Drops 50 Cents a Ton

Pittsburgh, July 20 (AP).—Number 1 heavy melting steel scrap declined 50 cents a ton today to a range of $19 to $19.50 a ton. Only small sales were made at the lower figure.

The scrap market has shown signs of weakness lately following a long climb up the price ladder earlier this year.

Marble Tile Eases Color Monotony

Use Enhances Beauty Of Old Homes; Suede Finish Glass Effective

Color monotony in homes, shops, theaters, and churches is combated economically by a marble tile which may be used for fronts and entrances, vestibules, bathrooms, mantel facings, floors and many other building purposes, according to a bulletin of the Producers' Council edited by the Structural Service Department of the American Institute of Architects.

Combining the effect with the individuality of marble, the marble tile is effective for new work or for enhancing the beauty of an old home and bringing life to a dingy city front, it is pointed out. It is genuine marble, one-half inch hick, cut to standard sizes, and grooved on the back like glazed tile. It can be set like clay tile and is priced between ordinary wall tile and faience.

Structural glass with a "suede-finish," a soft, unobtrusive surface finish of less brilliance and more restrained reflectivity, is described as giving "striking effect" in period interiors, store fronts, bathrooms and kitchens, building lobbies, and similar applications. It is available in white, black, gray, ivory, jade, beige, forest green, orange, wine and Rembrandt blue.

"The soft, velvety surface of extraordinary richness is obtained by special treatment of the glass under the polishing machines," it is explained. "Its texture so diffuses the light that reflectometer readings show the actual glare reduced by approximately 45 to 75 per cent, depending upon the color involved. Yet in softening the reflectivity of the surface, the reflections are not blurred or distorted in any way.

"Cleanability was a primary consideration in the development of the suede-finish structural glass. It can be washed with entire satisfaction. If it has been soiled by grease, mastic, or other hard-to-remove materials, it can first be cleaned with an oil-free gasoline, and then, if necessary, with a solution made from 1 pint of household ammonia to 10 quarts of water. A special-purpose glass, suede finish rounds out and extends the design and decorative possibilities inherent in structural glass for modern uses."

A new glass block diffuses direct sunlight and reduces solar heat transmission by means of a thin, pressed sheet of glass fibers, inserted and sealed between the two halves of the block. Because this screen is fused into the "all-glass" seal, it becomes an integral part of the block.

"The use of large glass areas to provide an abundance of natural daylight has frequently presented a problem of light distribution on bright days, especially in direct sunlight," the bulletin says. "The new glass block effectively answers this problem. It diffuses transmitted light, scattering direct sunlight so completely that it is not objectionable, even when transmitted through sizable panels required for adequate illumination of large floor areas.

"The glass block makes an interesting and attractive panel, as the design of the block is apparent, but softened by the diffusion screen. Privacy is even more assured than with conventional patterns. It is recommended for use wherever it is desirable to take advantage of the insulation of light-transmitting areas through the use of glass blocks, and at the same time obtain maximum diffusion and reduction of brightness. Examples of such conditions are:

"Large areas on unshaded East, South or West exposures where softly diffused light and reduced solar heat gain are desired. Any sun exposure where diminished brightness is desired, and where obstruction and poor reflecting surfaces of ceilings make the use of special light-directing blocks inadvisable. In conjunction with special light-directing blocks where a combination of directed and diffused light is desired."

With the valuable diffusion of light, the block transmits approximately 85 per cent as much light as the standard block of the same pattern without the screen of glass fibers, it is stated.

"Tests show that the total solar heat gain through glass block panels is made up of two factors—radiant heat directly transmitted into the room, and heat first absorbed by the panel itself and then partly re-radiated and partly conducted into the room. The fiberglas screen materially reduces the direct radiation and largely accounts for the very low figure for total heat gain—about 60 per cent that of the conventional block of identical pattern, or some 35 per cent that of single glazed sash.

Will Reduce Cooling Loads

"This reduction of sola heat will appreciably reduce cooling loads in air-conditioned rooms, but will not eliminate the need for adequate ventilation of non-air-conditioned rooms."

Diswasher units are now integrated with other kitchen cabinet units, assuring perfect uniformity in the kitchen, and the complete ensemble can be so arranged to fill any specified wall length exactly. The height of installation is 3 feet; depth, 25 inches. Toe space is recessed 3 inches in depth, 4 inches in height.

A new type of synthetic rosin emulsion paint hides completely in one coat and dries in 1 hour to a smooth flat finish free from brush marks, it is reported. It has high light reflection qualities, making its use desirable where the saving of light is important, and is recommended for painting interior surfaces of plaster, concrete, hollow-tile, cinder-block, wallboard, and acoustic surfaces and exterior surfaces such as stucco, concrete and cement.

The difficulties experienced in painting walls that are fire-checked, patched, or have heat cracks are overcome by a combination of white pigments and oil size which is said to assure an even non-porous priming coat.

Vast Royal Dutch Oil Firm to Meet In West Indies

New York, July 20 (AP).—The trek of refugees from war-shattered Europe had a "big business" representative today in the vast Royal Dutch Petroleum Co., which in a formal announcement said its next shareholders' meeting would be held at Curacao, Netherlands West Indies, on July 30.

It will be the first stockholders' meeting since the Nazi invasion of Holland, and so far as is known here, the first to be held outside its old home office in the Hague. It will signify virtual completion of hastily worked out plans for transfer of headquarters from The Hague to the little Dutch island in the Caribbean.

A balance sheet released with the company's call for the stockholders' meeting showed Royal Dutch had resources amounting to 1,104,072,136 florins as of December 31, 1939. The florian was last quoted in the foreign exchange market at around 53 cents in terms of the dollar. This was just before the country was invaded in May.

As a reminder of the complications and threatened questionable claims of ownership of Royal Dutch shares growing out of the German invasion, the company's announcement contained this warning:

"The directors wish to call particular attention to the fact that rights of ownership can only be exercised in conformity with the Royal decree of May 24, 1940, also Curacao trading with the enemy act of May 11, 1940 . . ."

Lead Shipments Increase in June

New York, July 20 (AP).—Domestic shipments of lead in June increased to 49,904 tons from 46,919 in May and 38,710 a year ago, the American Bureau of Metal Statistics reported today.

Production contracted to 42,306 tons from 46,268 in May, but was ahead of 39,068 in June last year. Stocks at the end of June dropped to 55,343 tons from 62,955 a month earlier and were less than half of 139,636 tons held at the end of June, 1939.

Music Firm Changes Name

Paint Helped Hotel Regain Lost Prestige

16 Tons of It Used To Revive Popularity Of Berkeley, Hotel

By Edith Bristol

Berkeley, Calif.—Sixteen tons of paint—and a conservative suburban hotel emerged an attractive and inviting landmark on a California hillside. For nearly 30 years the Claremont was half hidden in its wooded gardens overlooking this university town and San Francisco Bay. Now it's completely transformed by its new paint job and people who have been passing by its grounds for years now stop to ask: "What's that handsome new white building up on the hill? I never noticed it before!"

A full 16 tons of paint was the amount required to change the substantial, dull-colored hotel into the arresting new one. The Claremont was completed around 1912. Designed as a hotel of the resort type, it became famous among tennis players for its proximity to the tennis courts where laurels were won by such tennis aces as Helen Wills Moody, Helen Jacobs, Don Budge and Alice Marble. As a social center for collegiate groups, the hotel has been widely known, too, gradually entering the class of the popular family hotel.

It is almost 30 years since the big structure with its 300 bedrooms has been completely repainted and the original brown tones were naturally weatherworn when the painters took it in hand.

For the exterior of the rambling structure, two coats of off-white paint were used. The color chosen for the main lobby was pastel green. This is called the "garden lobby" and opens directly onto the gardens for which the hotel is famous.

The big cocktail room that overlooks the bay, hills, ocean, Golden Gate and the two great bridges is done in bleached woods with a rubbed lacquer finish. Apricot is used as an accent color. The terrace room, another popular public room, is done in a soft restful powder blue.

The walls of the 300 bedrooms, originally covered in wallpaper, have been stripped and painted in smoke blue, dusty rose and off-white. Modernizing the bathrooms in an old hotel of this type was a special task which was met by giving each bath three coats of off-white—sanded and rubbed after each coat. The final finish was egg-shell enamel.

The "face-lifting" process given the fine old hotel by means of its new painting has been followed by an immediate return to popular favor for teas, luncheons, parties, dances and dinners. Clubs and societies which had forgotten or never heard of the Claremont Hotel are finding—since its new white dress has been put on—that it is a convenient place to meet, that it's easy to find, that it offers them good service. As a consequence, they return again and again.

From the top of Twin Peaks in San Francisco, from Narin's shores and for 20 miles around the bay, the big white building stands out plainly among the trees and shrubs. Its managers, Mr. and Mrs. Claude Gillum, believe that never before was a total of 16 tons of paint used to better advantage.

Public Offerings Top $117,000,000

New York, July 20 (AP).—The machinery for distribution of new security issues continued to function smoothly during the week ended yesterday, public offerings totaling $117,870,000, Poor's Publishing Co. reported today. It was the second successive week that new offerings have exceeded $100,00,000.

It was an active week for corporate financing, but only 18 per cent of the total represented a demand for new money. The remainder of the issues were for the purpose of refunding existing obligations. Offerings of public utility securities reached their highest level of the year to date.

Aviation Corp. to Buy Republic of Detroit

New York, July 20 (AP).—Aviation Corporation, a holding company for various aircraft enterprises, announced today it had contracted for purchase of the Republic Aircraft Products Corporation, Detroit, makers of motor and plane parts.

Aviation Corporation, the announcement said, offered 1¾ shares of its capital stock for each share of Republic Aircraft products, subject to approval of the latter's directors and shareholders.

The plans call for operation of the Detroit concern under the present management as the Republic Aircraft Products Division of the Aviation Manufacturing Corporation, subsidiary of Aviation Corporation.

Aerial Photos Supplanting Field Surveys

Bird's Eye Mapping Is Quick, Economical, Robbins Points Out

Aerial photographic mapping is rapidly replacing field surveying in preliminary highway location, soil conservation and regional planning, according to Paul H. Robbins, instructor in civil engineering at Cooper Union, New York. As an economic shortcut, photogrammetry, the science of creating contour maps from photographs, will soon be as necessary to the civil engineers as the traditional transits and leveling rods, Mr. Robbins believes.

In planning highway routes, a good aerial contour map indicates the grades and curvatures which would have to be encountered and enables the engineers to select the most economical of several possible lines, he says. From a bird's-eye view of the surrounding terrain, sources of local construction material may be located and long-distance hauling avoided. Quickly taken and always available, aerial maps are invaluable for plotting detours to absorb traffic during road construction and for gathering data for municipal planning and zoning.

As part of a preparedness program against possible enemy attack, Connecticut is using a composite aerial photograph of its 5,004 square miles to locate all available sources of water and to plan a defense of vital dams and reservoirs. The entire State was photographed from an altitude of 12,000 feet and prints are in continual demand by State and city engineers for use in development projects. The Connecticut State highway department is also using them effectively in studying relocation problems, curves, intersections and by-passes.

The Long Island State Park Commission uses photogrammetry when determining possible parkway lines through areas of high real estate values, so that the proposed route will not attract the attention of property owners until actual negotiations are promulgated to acquire the right of way. The Suffolk County, N. Y., highway department determines the damage done by storms to its roads along the southern coast of Long Island by surveying from airplanes.

Aerial mapping was employed by Syracuse, N. Y., in a comprehensive study of grade-crossing elimination. It is used in erecting high-tension power lines and establishing drainage areas and proper sites of drainage structures. The Federal Government, leading exponent of photogrammetry, is obtaining for the first time accurate charting of the Florida keys, is recording the extent of the dust bowl area and planning soil conservation and reforestation by means of its flying civil engineers.

Photogrammetry will be made a required course for third-year civil engineering students next year at the Cooper Union Institute of Technology, it is announced. A photogrammetry laboratory and a dark room to develop aerial survey films is being installed for class work and senior research.

The laboratory will be complete with stereoscopes and stereocomparagraphs which make a photograph appear three-dimensional and enable engineers to obtain the exact contour of the photographed countryside. There is a choice of scale, contour interval, and a degree of accuracy in contour representation which allows cartographers to create maps from photographs which are in many cases far superior to those drawn from land surveys, Mr. Robbins states.

While the pilot flies in a straight line at a given altitude, the aerial camera automatically takes rapid shots of the terrain directly below the plane. A 60 per cent overlapping of pictures assures at least one common point of identification appearing in three negatives. Thus a crossroads may appear in the first, second and third pictures; a farmhouse in the second, third and fourth, and a pond in the fourth, fifth and sixth. Long strips of pictures are matched up and made into a composite picture of the whole countryside.

By knowing the height of three points in the first picture of a series, the skilled surveyor can draw up a contour map for the entire strip, comparing the heights in the second picture with the known heights in the first, the heights in the third picture with the plotted heights in the second, and so on. When this process is completed, he has a map indicating the height of each hill, the depth of each gully, feasible stream crossings, possible ridge routes and other factors essential to any kind of civil engineering.

In this way studies can be made of locations where heavy forestation, inaccessible mountains, or dense population make surveying from the ground nearly impossible. In all situations, Mr. Robbins points out, aerial surveying can be completed in a fraction of the time it takes to make a field survey, and usually more inexpensively.

U. S. Hog Supply Estimated Lower

By the Associated Press

The Agriculture Department yesterday estimated the supply of hogs for slaughter in the 1940-41 marketing season would be about 10 per cent smaller than the 48,000,000 head slaughtered this year.

The department attributed this to a smaller 1940 spring pig crop.

It said also that slaughter supplies of cattle probably would be smaller than the current year. But that the supply of sheep and lambs would be slightly larger.

Fun's Informal In Filmtown

By Lucie Neville
Hollywood.

If any Hollywood newcomer hopes to be invited to some wild movie parties, he's going to be sadly disappointed. He can, of course, have his choice of whisky and soda or ice cream soda at most of them, but there hasn't been a gilded orgy since the Hayes office moved in.

Movietown's idea of a real bang-up party is one where it doesn't have to dress up, isn't photographed, eats prodigiously and can take off a couple of pounds by swimming or dancing. It'll talk about that kind of affair for weeks afterward.

There are a few hostesses who try valiantly to educate the stars in the correct way of having fun. But after an evening of sitting around in stiff shirts and listening to an imported violinist, most of the guests go home with a thank-goodness-that's-over air. Night club parties usually are confined to celebrating birthdays or wedding anniversaries, and the bigger brawls now are usually charity round-ups.

They Know How To Amuse Themselves

Hollywood just won't play follow-the-social-leader. It has ignored the professional fun organizers, even the ones appointed by some studios to give free advice to the stars on brighter and giddier entertainment. Instead, these hired court jesters are going back where they came from with new tips on how to sling a successful whing-ding as practiced by the screen folk.

They'll probably duplicate the dancing lessons that Joan Davis introduced, install soda fountains such as Ginger Rogers' and Jane Withers' and copy the dress rehearsal parties Ann Rutherford gives. And their clients will be happier if the fun maestros follow Hollywood's rule of planning entertainment for the guests—not picking the guests to meet the hostess' idea of fun.

That's why the Rutherford household is upside-down for two nights in a row—the first night a party to get ready for the real party. The place is a modest duplex, with no servants, but the gang likes to come to Ann's, play the piano while she rattles the trap drums and dance its feet off. So the half dozen ringleaders of the younger set gather there the evening before the real shindig and plan the games, prepare most of the food, wax the floors. They say it makes them feel responsible for the success of the party and everybody's fun the following night.

Hostess Taught Guests the Rumba

The same sort of spirit was behind Joan Davis' dancing-school sessions which began when the lanky comedienne and husband, Cy Wills, found they were sitting out about half the numbers at every night club. At the first whirr of the rumba gourds, the Willses would nonchalantly stroll off the floor and sit down to pick at their food while enviously watching up-to-date dancers waggle and stomp. It was cold comfort to notice that most of their friends, too, belonged to the pre-Cuban dance era.

So Miss Davis desided to do something about it. She invited all the dancing dubs to come over, then turned three rumba instructors loose on them. As the finale of several strenuous hours, the exhausted teachers judged a contest, gave the winners of the Joan Davis Rumba Short Course a stalk of bananas. Now her crowd's first on the dance floor and she plans to repeat the idea with La Conga and other new dance crazes.

Another learn-while-you-play hostess is Ginger Rogers, whose soda fountain isn't a gag. It's kept well stocked, and friends with thwarted ambitions to be juice-jerkers can experiment all they please.

Willowy, titian-haired Ginger Rogers knows what kind of fun film folk enjoy most. The gay chatter around her private soda fountain reflects the kind of light-hearted entertainment most popular with Hollywoodians.

There's one mixture Miss Rogers won't forget: Margaret Sullavan's super-special. "She started out," Miss Rogers recalled, "by announcing, 'I know you won't have all the things I need for it.' But the only thing she couldn't find was milk, so mother went out to the kitchen for that. Maggie began putting in a squirt of this and a dipper of that, a jigger of cream, the milk—all with great flourishes and a beautiful lecture on the art of mixing, while about 20 people watched, very awed. Then she put it under the zizzer, took a long drag at it—and nearly choked! Mother had snatched up the first bottle she saw, and it was buttermilk.

"I think my home-owned fountain was the first in Hollywood, and I got it mainly because drug-store sodas aren't big enough to satisfy me. I'm just beginning to get interested when I get to the bottom of the glass. But you'd be surprised how many people would rather mix their own choc-malts then be served cocktails. Nobody ever goes into the living room for parties—they all hang around the studio and the pool or the tennis court. I can't imagine how it would feel to be hostess at a formal dinner with place cards and no butter. The only excuse I'd have for that would be to show off a new dress."

The Rogers Sunday parties usually wind up with a movie in her studio, everybody yelling, "Hey, wait till I get a cone!" before the picture starts, and trailing peanuts and popcorn as they go to their seats.

Entertains on Cook's Day Off

These home showings of new films are typically Hollywood, and projection rooms are almost as common as swimming pools. So Virginia Bruce feels apologetic that she can ask guests only for dinner—but no double-feature. Her director-husband says he sees enough movies without having them for dessert. But they get caviar, and there's usually a poker game, and as a special concession, the women are asked to dress.

"At first, we'd say, 'Wear anything,' because the men always like to go out and see the stables," Miss Bruce explained. "But the girls began calling me up to say, 'Look, do you mind if we dress?' So they come in dinner gowns and their husbands show up in sweaters or plaid shirts, and everybody's satisfied."

Best point of these dinners is that they are always on Thursday, when everybody else's cook and maid are off duty. Lupe Velez and her sister take over their kitchen on that night, too, and serve friends the hottest and best Mexican food north of the border.

With consideration for Hollywood's working hours, Dorothy Lamour entertains on preview nights—an early dinner, usually Creole or Hawaiian dishes, so that her guests can take their time but get to the 8:30 opening on the dot.

Eleanor Powell, busier than most stars because she spends weeks in dance rehearsals before a picture, entertains in a way that would be completely crazy anywhere except in Hollywood. She gives parties when she has fashion fittings and camera sittings. If they're on the Metro lot, it's a picnic—sort of dinner all day and singing on the grounds. At home, she has a huge buffet luncheon and a rhumba band or Hawaiian orchestra and manages to have considerable fun herself, snatching a sandwich and a dance between costume changes.

Hawaii, current favorite vacation spot, is giving stars better ideas than the professional fun-makers can suggest. For her swimming pool christening, Bette Davis plans a party modeled after the ones she went to in Honolulu—has found a bona fide Hawaiian orchestra and says she may even do a hula, though she refused to perform with other malihinis when she was there.

"Must be my New England blood," she said. "Anyway, I begged off guest-starring. It's a sort of amateur night affair—everybody new at the party has to get up and do some sort of stunt with the orchestra. I think I'll leave poi off my menu, too—tastes and feels too much like library paste. Instead I'll make it a sort of New Englander-Hawaiian meal, with fruits and roast suckling pig."

Younger Set Likes to Eat

Food's half the party with the youngsters in Hollywood, as everywhere else. Jane Withers' indigestion special is a cheese-bacon-hamburger, and her mildest version of a chocolate soda includes whipped cream, a dash of almond flavoring and a couple of cherries. She thinks the only redeeming virtue of a formal affair is the chance to wear a long dress and sees no reason except a drenching rainstorm for holding a party indoors. Swellest one she recalls was Freddie Batholomew's beach blowout, with hot dogs and chili, foot races and leapfrog, and everybody helping lug wood for the fire.

Now that she has her own apartment — complete with kitchen, soda fountain and miniature piano —Miss Withers can entertain in style. But her Fourth of July party was modeled on the ones she used to have in prestar days when she and her mother would take a gang of youngsters to Griffith Park, where swings and pool are public. This year she had a pool of her own and an outdoor dance floor, but everybody played strenuous games, toasted his own marshmallows and hot dogs, guzzled milk and pop and ice cream.

Others in her set—the Gay Teen Club—take turns at hosting. Johnny Pirrone had a spaghetti dinner, Joe E. Brown, jr., a roller skating party. Mary McCarthy had to get special permission from the gang before she could invite them to her night club spree—it was too expensive and too high-hat, according to club rules, but she had been promised it as a birthday gift from her family.

Food's important to the adults, too, and successful Hollywood hosts have their own specialties—home-raised fried chicken at the Clark Gables, barbecue at the Dick Powells, French dishes at Claudette Colbert's and Charles Boyer's. Binnie Barnes starts her athletic Sunday morning parties with fruit juices. Then, after an hour of tennis, swimming or badminton, she serves a typical English breakfast with curries, kidney stew and other filling hot dishes.

Horton Conducts A Guest Tour

A Sunday at Edward Everett Horton's isn't complete without a tour of his enormous estate—inspecting the machine shop and barns, seeing his latest antique acquisition, feeding the menagerie he has collected from animals that appear in his pictures. Special feature of his luncheons is letting the guests mix their own fruit cocktails from a huge platter of fruits—strawberries, Japanese persimmons, oranges—grown in the Horton orchards.

Traditional after the finish of a Woodie Van Dyke picture is the party for the cast and crew at the director's home. Few outsiders are asked to these affairs, and the conversation's strictly shop-talk while stars and hairdressers, actors and propmen hang over Van Dyke's lighted aquarium-bar.

Talk's the only entertainment offered at Myrna Loy's parties, too; they're usually don't-dress ones, with swimming and a barbecue supper in the patio. Rosalind Russell, who says she hates to go to big blowouts but likes to give them, will play games—charades, quotations, 20 questions—if she has to, but she'd rather start a good, brisk argument. So far, nobody in Hollywood has refused to oblige her.

Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, July 20.—Sit down anywhere in Hollywood with a group of producers and as soon as they've exchanged the latest news on the races, war and the stock market, the conversation will veer around to the fact that what the motion picture business needs is a shot of new and good stories, new and good angles and brand new personalities who can act. These things, they insist, would rejuvenate and refresh a weary old industry, whose favorite, the public, is showing signs of getting tired.

HEDDA HOPPER

But just start telling these same producers, "I know a young chap who's got a grand idea for a screen story, something brand new," and before the words are half out of your mouth, you'll find yourself alone.

Certainly, Hollywood needs stories with new slants and angles, and it needs fresh actors; but it's Hollywood's own fault that it doesn't get them. With as closed vision as the ostrich with his head in the sand, the studios refuse to take a look at the talent that lies about them.

And the talented amateur faces the old problem: He can't get a job until he has made good, and he can't make good until he gets a job.

There are undoubtedly thousands of people in these United States who have an especial genius for writing screen plays—but their genius has practically no chance to reach the screen. No motion picture producer will look at their scenarios until they can prove that they have sold short stories, a novel, or a play. They say, "It's all writing, isn't it?" which is just as sensible as saying you won't engage a pianist until he can prove he can play the piccolo. It's all music, isn't it?

One reason why there is such a parade of writers to and from Hollywood is that a writer may be master of the essay, the serial, or the short story and still be a complete flop at screen writing.

What Hollywood needs right now is a research laboratory to evaluate human material. When I say "research," I don't mean a department such as some of the larger studios have and where experts wait with the answers to questions such as "Do the Afghans use forks and fish knives?" or "Did Henry the VII wear lace on his panties?" No, indeed, I'm talking about a department that will hunt and find and appraise the most important and most expensive thing that the studios use—human beings with exceptional writing or acting ability. For while technical detail is helpful, Hollywood stands or falls on the quality of its actors and writers.

The studios send huge sums for research into the qualities of film, into experimental work with various types of cameras and lights and sound apparatus, all in the hope of getting something that will enable them to do better work and so increase their profits. But the man or woman whose personality or brains could give the Midas touch to a picture has to fight his or her way into the studios over every conceivable barrier that can be set before them. And the very men, producers, and executives, who are occupying the highest positions, with salaries to match, and are now most insistent that the gates be closed against others, are the very ones who could not have risen at all without the help others gave them.

Where would Zanuck be without Jack Warner's helping hand—or Cecil De Mille without the partnership of Jesse Lasky and Sam Goldwyn—or Sam Goldwyn without the help of Doug, Mary and Chaplin, when they formed United Artists? Name any of them, and look at those who have helped them along the way.

It's true that, as far as actors are concerned, there are talent scouts who scan theatrical performances, floor shows, Broadway and the scandal sheets for personality plus, but they issue no bids to Hollywood unless the recipient has already climbed several rungs of the ladder to fame or front page. They think it is wisest to "discover" only those who already have been discovered by some sizable portion of the public. And occasionally they come upon a star possibility by accident.

But as a whole, the present system is hit-or-miss at best. I do believe auditions for actors and actresses should be held regularly in motion picture theaters in various parts of the country so that young people and their parents would not have to spend their last cent on trips to Hollywood before they could find out that their ability was insufficient to get them on the screen.

Louella Parsons

Hollywood, July 20.—The Hedy Lamarr-Gene Markey separation carries more than the heartache of the husband and wife involved. It concerns, and deeply, a little child who has learned to call Hedy mother with absolute dependence and faith. The Markeys took little Jimmy away from an orphanage and they have showered him with every attention and every luxury. But he hasn't been with them a year, so it's possible that Jimmy will be taken away from his comfortable home and returned to live with the other less fortunate children.

HEDY LAMARR

The rule is that adopted parents must remain together at least a year after they adopt a baby, or else lose the child. But Hedy is leaving no stone unturned to keep Jimmy, for she adores him. Influential friends are helping her, insisting that the little one will have expert care and all the advantages that money can supply.

But the whole thing is now under consideration with Hedy worried and unhappy. Seems too bad a little child must be the one to suffer through no fault of his. Every time there is a marital upset in Hollywood it affects the chances of some little child being adopted into a good home. Movie people are viewed with more distrust by these organizations than the average persons. That's because so many untrue things have been printed and such a false picture painted of Hollywood.

I still maintain there is no more divorce in the movie colony than in any other town the same size. But because these stars are famous, every time they have a domestic split the front pages blazon the story.

Because of this, The Cradle, in Evanston, the institution where so many of our Hollywood children came from, have been very reluctant of late to give their charges to movie stars for adoption. Such an attitude is unfair because the little ones who thus far have found happy homes are given not only good care, but love and devotion—a thing money cannot buy.

The little foundling the Eddie Hillmans took was taken back after Marian Nixon and he separated. Studying the case, the Juvenile Society stated they could not leave the blue-eyed laughing babe there even though Eddie pleaded. Later Marian married William Seiter and adopted a girl and a boy. She is a splendid mother and would probably have been just as good to the other little one, but the society felt it couldn't take a chance.

The adopted children in Hollywood, Joan Benny, Sandra and Ronald Burns, the Fredric Marches' children, Irene Dunne's little girl, the Pat O'Briens' little boy and girl, and Joe E. Brown's little girl are given every care, and their fathers and mothers are proud of them and tell all the cute things they do with the pride of natural parents.

So it would be unfortunate, indeed, if these divorces were to interfere with some poor child having a happy home. Divorce always affects the children. Judge Lindsay, who has studied child psychology and knows the effect divorce has on a child who loves both his father and mother, is doing his utmost to try and keep parents together.

He has sponsored a conciliation act recently passed by the Legislature, which prevents parents from seeking any sort of legal separation for 30 days. It is the judge's contention that quarrels could be easily patched up if young people could sit down and air their grievances before an arbitrator.

The Wayne Morrises are the first movie folk to take advantage of this conciliation act. Whether or not it will work out remains to be seen, but on the request of Wayne the young couple are meeting with Judge Lindsay. They will be questioned separately and then together in company with their attorneys, and each one will tell his side and, perhaps, since usually it takes two for a quarrel, they can get over this hurdle. We hope so, since they have a little baby.

This New York

By Lucius Beebe

Time was when Boston was the most important metropolis in the land and when Boston shops were, therefore, the standard of chic and elegance, when there was hardly a town of importance from Montauk to San Diego but had its "Boston Store." Times change and indexes of civilization vary, and today, as any traveler will tell you, there is scarcely a community large enough to support its own brand of night life but has its El Morocco, Stork Club or Monte Carlo. Driving over the inland route to San Francisco a few weeks ago, the reporter stopped for gas at Fresno and found himself directly across the street from a sort of Shubert road-company version of El Morocco, big as life and complete with cellophane palm trees and blue and white zebra skin upholstery. All the premises lacked was John Perona at a corner table and Carino bowing in the doorway. The management assured us that the wine steward was even then growing whiskers in imitation of the great original in Fifty-fourth street. In Fresno. Imagine! Only a short time ago, and, for all we know to this minute, there was, too, an El Morocco, identical in decorative motif, in the chaste purlieus of Boston's Commonwealth avenue, and there have been other redactions of the Perona legend in Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit and countless other places.

W. C. FIELDS

At the current moment the fashionable hotspot of Hollywood is called Ciro's, having borrowed its name from the celebrated London nitery and its decorative scheme from New York's own Monte Carlo, the layout for which was designed by Dorothy Draper, of Hampshire House fame. As might be expected Hollywood's imitation Monte Carlo is bigger and gaudier than the original, and the manners of the management are geared to the clientele, which is composed of film people, on whom the gracious urbanity of Gene Cavallero and Fefe Ferry would be entirely lost. In the Hollywood dump a short time since, the reporter, being unfamiliar with the premises, had the temerity to inquire of the maitre d'hotel the whereabouts of the washroom. "Ask some one else!" snapped that imperial personage.

Reversing the customary order of emergence from Manhattan, the rash of Beachcombers, Tropics Bars, Hurricanes, South Seas Saloons and Zombie Palaces which is currently sweeping the land probably had its origin in Los Angeles, where Beachcomber Don has for years held forth in a gloomy grotto of strong waters specializing in rum toddies of paralyzing dimensions. Don now has an outpost in Chicago, which, while it may not be worrying Ernie Byfield, is still largely affected by the gilded youth of Michigan Boulevard and Astor street, and he promises one for New York. It will then be possible to cross the continent without emerging from a zombie swoon. Just now there is hardly a self-respecting community in North America that hasn't some sort of a beachcomber boozerie, ranging from Trader Vic's in Oakland to Monte Prosser's outpost of the United States Mint at the World's Fair in Flushing. All one needs to go into business as a genuine Sadie Thompson character is a pair of potted palms, a bamboo decor and a drink list composed entirely of Singapore Slings and South Seas Swizzles. When all this nonse is over, however, there will remain the permanent and immutable hallmarks of sound guzzling; brass cuspidors, mahogany bars and white jacketed barkeeps named John. From the back room at the Plaza to the Jackhammer Cafe in Indio, Calif., this is the way it should and will be.

From that fabulous land of Bagdad-on-the-Pacific comes the latest of the great W. C. Fields anecdotes, relayed by Charlie Adler: Fields once drove a studio gateman crazy with his three 16-cylinder cars, a sedan, a coupe and a roadster. For a gag he parked the roadster on the back lot over night. Next morning he drove up to the gate at 9:10 in the black sedan and was flagged through. When he was out of sight Bill got out of the car, went to the roadster, drove it off the lot through the back gate, and at 9:16 solemnly showed up at the front gate in it, asking to be let through. "You just went through a few minutes ago, Mr. Fields," the studio cop said. "An imposter, no doubt, my careless friend!" Bill intoned. "Make way, I have work to do!" Once inside, and again out of sight of the gate, he got out of the roadster, ran through the executive offices and out to the street, where he had the coupe parked. He got into it, and for a third time drove up to the main gate. "Mr. FIELDS!" the bewildered cop screamed. "Why do you shout at me this way?" Bill scolded. "It's a horrible thing to see a man lose his grip at your age. Open the gate and let me in!" And with a mighty sweep and roar of all 16 cylinders, Bill drove through. It took the policeman all day to snag back his tattered nerves—and he never yet has figured out what happened.

Senility of Gallic Drama Manifest But Critics Refused to View Fact as Sign of French Decay

By Richard Watts, Jr.

New York.

Just a year ago last Sunday this peregrinating observer celebrated Bastille Day in the colorful Chinese city of Kunming, in the far-away province of Yunnan, preliminary to setting forth on an expedition in mid-rainy season over that almost mythical Burma Road, which is once more appearing in the news.

The French influence in Kunming and throughout most of Yunnan has long been strong, and the feast day of Liberty, Equality and Fraternity was one of exuberance and much good cheer. There was, in fact, considerably more celebration than there had been among the hearty Americans aboard and in the vicinity of the gunboat Tutuila in the Yangste near the capital city of Chungking on the Fourth of July. Long into the night the French, English and American colonies of the metropolis of Yunnan, as well as some of the anti-Nazi German residents and a number of tolerant Chinese, carried on the gayety, and the compound of the picturesque if somewhat mosquito-ridden Hotel du Lac was filled with all of the cheerful noises of conviviality.

It was all very rousing and comforting, and we were filled with, among other things, a fine glow for the glories of France and its civilization. At the moment I would even have included the modern French theater, which was going to extremes.

Has Bearing On Drama

I remember, too, that, dwelling in the blackened cities of Kunming and Chungking between Japanese air raids and in the picturesque if frequently odorous villages along the Burma Road, I kept thinking of Paris, the city of light, and how fine it would be to get back there and sip pernod in the sidewalk cafes and visit some of my favorite restaurants.

Here I am, as you can see for yourself, going in for reminiscences, partially because this is the time of the year when I am usually in either Paris or one of those cities of the Far East that give me so much pleasure. But I really do have a moral of some sort to present and it even has something to do with the drama. Anyway, it was just a trifle over a year ago that I joined with considerable enthusiasm the applause for the French and for the beautiful civilization that they had developed, and now France not only lies vanquished at the foot of her conqueror, but seems almost to grovel there.

Liberty, Equality and Fraternity, those noblest of watchwords, have been torn from her banner, and a shameful Fascist slave-state has been substituted for the Third Republic. It was a thing that almost no one had anticipated, because all of us were too deeply impressed and delighted by the enjoyable fruits of Gallic culture.

Drama a Symbol Of Freedom

If, then, the pleasant achievements of this culture hid from us the rottenness that lay beneath, are these graceful amenities of civilization, from good books to good food, the great glory they are supposed to be, or is Hitler right in looking upon them as shams and deceptions?

I still cannot believe that the creation of art and beauty is not one of the important signs of the greatness of a civilization, and it is at least comforting to know that the drama still gives valiant evidence of being one of the tests of a nation's spiritual health.

Find a land where the drama is dead or dying and you see a country that has either lost its freedom or is sowing the seeds of its own doom. Even those of us who loved so many manifestations of the French spirit recognized that the modern Gallic drama was senile and decadent, but somehow we refused to see how important that fact was as a sign of national decay.

Yet, heaven knows, we have had enough evidence of that curiously direct relationship between the theater and the free spirit of a people. The dream of Germany and Italy died with the arrival of the regimes of Hitler and Mussolini. Hungary, which once had a thriving theater, became dramatically moribund as totalitarianism tightened its grip upon the land. In the days when the Soviet Union was a land of hope and promise its theater was the liveliest in the world, and now that it has become another vulture power its stage has collapsed into bleakness.

Should Not Be Neglected

Perhaps all of this is coincidence. Certainly, the theater is but one of the many signs of a national spirit, and it is easy to put too much importance on the relation between national drama and national morale.

At the same time it is just as simple to attach too little importance to the same relationship. I certainly don't mean that the first step in American defense should be to get a few dramatists and an ingenue or two rather than some motorized divisions and dive bombers. But the theater should be accepted as one of the best gauges of national health and not be neglected in any consideration of the land's well being, for all the armaments in the world do not seem to help much if the spirit of a country is weakened and made ready for Fascism. France proved that with tragic conclusiveness.

The theater sometimes seems such an exotic growth that it is hard to believe that it is of great importance. Sometimes it seems merely another plaything for the rich, and it is hardly worth more consideration than the French adultery-drama of the last days of the Third Republic. But it can be infinitely more than that.

When it is producing an "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," or a "There Shall Be No Night" or, for its valuable astringent quality, a "Little Foxes" or when it is giving us the rich, earthy, American gusto of a Saroyan comedy, our drama is something to be cherished by all who care for the future of the country.

It may be dangerous to have the theater localized so exclusively in one community, but so long as it is live enough and vigorous enough to attract interest and talent from all parts of the Nation one of the important ramparts of American liberty is being defended.

Oscar Levant, who will be featured in the new Bing Crosby picture, related his film experience to Norman Krasna, the writer-producer. "Practically all my scenes were with Basil Rathbone," said Levant. "Playing opposite Rathbone made me feel as if I were in one of those scenes which always is in a Marx Bros. picture—a scene with Harpo and the ultra fancy Mrs. Dumont" . . . "I don't get it," Krasna innocently confessed. "Which one of you was Harpo?"

LEVANT

Two New York City commissioners and several department heads have testified at private hearings in the municipal civil service inquiry concerning favoritism. They've been subpoenaed to appear at the public hearings on July 23 . . . Larry Clinton took his plane over Fire Island last week, and practiced figure-eights. An Army plane kept diving under him, and finally shooed him away. When the bandleader landed he learned of the antiaircraft practice being held at Fire Island . . . All the defense appropriation bills had riders permitting the hiring of men without regard to Civil Service. The War Department heads, however, advised the generals to use the civil service men, to avoid delays because of patronage. One disapproving general therefore asked the Civil Service Commission for 50 trained mechanics, in Alaska. These men were furnished forthwith, and arrived there on schedule. That's why the riders were removed from the appropriation bills.

In G. E. R. Gedye's book, "Betrayal in Central Europe," the author writes of anonymous publisher who took the last train out of Vienna, and who furnished him with many of the stories . . . This publisher now can be named, for he is in America. He's Kurt Neuman, who published Vienna's most ardent anti-Nazi paper . . . He came to America from France where, after war had been declared, he and countless others, although anti-Nazis, were interned near Paris. Neuman was one of 5,000 men interned in Colombes Stadium. He spent three weeks there. During that time the prisoners all received the same food for breakfast, dinner and supper—the same dish which became monotonous, but which was the only dish the French could supply—pate de foie gras.

DAMON RUNYON: William Anthony McGuire is writing the screen play for the Sam Breben biographic film you suggested, "The Fighting Jew." McGuire works very slowly, and Zanuck finally sent a memo to him: "Dear Bill, how are you getting along with 'The Fighting Jew?'" McGuire's reply-memo read: "I can't even get him to shadow-box yet." . . . DASHIELL HAMMETT: Ernest Hemingway at last has sent up the final chapter of his new book. He needed all this time to find a way of disposing of three characters and a bridge—without using the obvious way of dynamiting bridge while the trio crossed it . . . ANITA LOOS: Henri Bernstein, the playwright, wooed your niece, Mary Anita Loos, who warned him: "You haven't a chance. I'm going to the Democratic Convention, where there are 1,000 strong men" . . . "In matters of love, a man is not afraid of a thousand men," said Bernstein, "but only of one."

SHERMAN BILLINGSLEY: Sidney Kingsley is writing a new play—based upon the Columnists table at your Stork Club . . . FIORELLO LaGUARDIA: The "If-elected Cabinet" Willkie plans to announce will include the names of the best vote-getters possible. It's a long chance, but his friends suggest that even your name should be included.

ART DEPT.: Michel Werboff, the artist, sat in Lindy's, where some of his friends mentioned the fact that King Alfonso of Spain, and King Gustaf of Sweden both had posed for Werboff portraits . . . "Do you paint any differently, when your subject is a King?" Werboff was asked . . . "No. To the artist, a subject is a subject—whether he be a king or commoner," he explained. "But, of course, kings make good references."

DRAMA DEPT.: Harpo Marx vows that he really did this: When Harpo visited Russia some years ago, he participated in a big benefit show at the Moscow Art Theater. He did his silverware-dropping-from-the-sleeves routine, played the harp, and then walked off—while the Moscow audience cheered . . . The official interpreter then went backstage, and told Harpo: "The audience wants to hear you talk" . . . "But they don't understand English," Harpo protested . . . "That's all right," the interpreter assured. "They just want to hear you talk" . . . And so Harpo obliged. He walked back to the stage, and recited the only speech he remembered—a speech he had delivered when he was 13—a speech which began: "As I stand among you, my dear friends and relatives, and realize that today I am a man . . ."

Brenda Marshall Finds Film Kisses 'Too Personal,' Even Errol Flynn's

Hollywood, July 20 (AP).—What, young lady, would you be thinking about in the middle of an Errol Flynn kiss?

Would you be carried away on clouds? Maybe you would, but not Brenda Marshall.

"I was wishing," she answered the query, "that somebody would yell 'cut.' Errol had my nose pressed flat against his cheek and I couldn't breathe."

At first blush that may not sound like much of a recommendation for this carefree adventurer one sometimes hears called a great lover.

"It wasn't all his fault," Brenda goes on. "Camera angles, not comfort, dictate how a screen kiss is made. But all the same I'd a lot rather kiss Joel McCrea."

He was the first man Brenda kissed, professionally, in Hollywood. She's not over enthusiastic even about that, but then she just doesn't like love scenes. They're the sole things about acting that bother her.

"There's something too personal, too intimate about kissing," she explains, and leaves it at that.

The dark-haired actress, who came to Hollywood from the Philippines via San Antonio, Tex., and Broadway, has kissed only three men in pictures.

"Get this straight," she says finally, "I'd really like to have a double for these kissing parts."

Keith's World Premiere Promises New Film Trend

"The Ramparts We Watch" Lays New Stress Upon Realistic Treatment, Utilizing Cast Of 1,400 Unknown Nonprofessional Players

By Nelson B. Bell.

IT WAS WIDELY SUGGESTED upon the release of David O. Selznick's "Gone With the Wind" that that mammoth motion picture would exert a strong influence upon future trends of the cinema in this country. That almost universal prophecy has largely come true.

BELL

An increasing interest in long and painstaking film productions that realize the full potentialities of the stories upon which they are based has been manifested by other film makers and other studios. A tacit willingness on the part of the public to accept reasonable modifications of the industry's self-imposed Production Code, looking to liberalization of certain of its most stringent restrictions, has made itself felt. It has been made clear that length and cost are not the primary concerns in estimating the value of screen entertainment. The total result has been completely salutary.

It is not beyond rational possibility that the revolutionary processes pursued by the editors of Time and Life in the fabrication of their first full-length photodramatic feature may have a similarly revolutionary effect upon the production of future screen subjects designed for entertainment.

This department already has recorded something of the departure from conventional film procedures signalized by the completion of "The Ramparts We Watch," coming to the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater for its world premiere on Tuesday night. Although engaging the services of a cast of 1,400, embracing some 73 principals in important speaking roles, not one of the number is a professional actor. The story of the effect of the first World War upon typical, American, small-town life has been lived, not acted. To heighten this impression of actuality, all of the usual camera tricks and gargantuan "sets" of Hollywood have been abandoned. No attempt has been made to achieve an "arty" film, beyond the degree to which "art" is synonymous with "actuality."

The experiment—if that is what it is—has consumed something in excess of 18 months of effort on the part of author, producers, technical staffs, director and cast. It was the pronouncement of the high command that "The Ramparts We Watch" must be right before any audience ever would be permitted to view it. Presumably it is as nearly the fulfillment of their purpose and wish as could be wrought by continuous and conscientious human effort.

May Give Realism a Much-Needed Impetus

WITHOUT MORE THAN PRESUPPOSING that "The Ramparts We Watch" is all that it was planned to be, it seems safe to assume that it will mark the beginning of a new theory of film production, based on a sound premise of realism as opposed to Hollywood's habitual penchant for spaciousness, magnificence and magnified dimensions.

The initiate among the picture-going public will experience no difficulty in recalling that many times in the past the glitter of many of Hollywood's most pretentious and most costly productions has been completely overshadowed by the simplicity, directness and conviction of foreign-made films, costing only a fraction as much and pretending to no spectacular grandeur whatsoever.

French directors and casts seemed to possess a peculiar facility in evolving tremendously effective and moving camera-dramas from simple stories, simply told and unostentatiously "staged" and photographed. The Germans—if it is not traitorous to say so at this juncture in world affairs—possessed a comparable skill in making much out of what would be deemed nothing by every Hollywood standard, and the English, too, occasionally succeeded in achieving the same happy result, before a closer association with American interests caused them to emulate our native propensity for substituting elaborate display for a starker and more substantial approach to reality.

On the evidence of all advance reports of the intentions of the producers and such word of the success of their undertaking as has preceded the picture to Washington, "The Ramparts We Watch" should give a fine impetus to the realistic, as against the idealistic, school of celluloid story-telling in this country.

This, of course, as yet is pure surmise. It remains to be seen in what manner audiences, habituated to the most sumptuous gelatins the world has ever known, will react to a film play stripped of all artificiality and depicting our way of life as it actually is lived. Public curiosity, at least, should insure its box-office success—by no means the safest basis of sound and infallible appraisal.

Story and Settings Perfectly Balanced in Current Hit

THESE ANTICIPATORY REMARKS concerning an unseen and unknown picture are in no sense intended to be a blanket indictment of Hollywood and its methods. More motion picture productions of the first rank have come out of our West Coast studios than from all the studios in Europe combined, although from the viewpoint of total volume of output they may be in lesser proportion.

The most immediate instance of a superlative balance between story and the manner of its screen treatment is to be found in "All This and Heaven Too," the Warner Brothers release costarring Bette Davis and Charles Boyer, now in its second week at the Earle Theater.

While in essence a romantic murder-mystery, this subject plumbs sufficiently deep into human conduct and emotions to provide a substantial dramatic foundation upon which to raise an imposing visual structure. The developments adapted from the Rachel Field novel are of a sturdiness to support a material investiture of uncommon magnitude and solidity. Many "sets" of unusual size and detailed completeness were erected as background for the action they never overpower.

This perfect coordination of emotional and visual elements in fashioning the camera version of the Field book is one of the great virtues of "All This and Heaven Too." A drama of weaker fiber accorded the same productional values would have given the impression of a small child dressed up in her mother's smothering finery. It is such disproportion that European films usually have evaded. It is such disharmony that one suspects "The Ramparts We Watch" has eluded with equal success.

New Actress Inherits Star-Making Role

ANOTHER OF THE "NEW" PICTURES on view this week that should elicit interested attention is "A Bill of Divorcement," at the Metropolitan. Quotation marks are employed to impugn its newness only because this release is another in the considerable line of old hits that have been remade.

Particular interest attaches to this issue of a familiar fable because it was in the earlier picturization of the tale that Katharine Hepburn first attracted the attention that led to her speedy stardom. Playing opposite John Barrymore, Miss Hepburn revealed a vibrance, and a uniqueness of personality, that lifted her from comparative obscurity directly into the spotlight that shines only upon the heights.

Maureen O'Hara now is cast in the role originally created by Miss Hepburn. Miss O'Hara is not so much an unknown quantity as was her predecessor in the part by reason of her association with Charles Laughton, who brought her to this country to play with him in "Jamaica Inn." Adolphe Menjou is cast as her father—the former Barrymore role—and Fay Bainter appears in the part previously assigned to Billie Burke. Herbert Marshall completes the quartet of principals.

More closely resembling Vivien Leigh than she does Miss Hepburn—and even that similarity is not too strong—Miss O'Hara offers anything but a carbon copy of the present star of "The Philadelphia Story." Chief interest lies in speculation as to what effect, if any, "A Bill of Divorcement" may have upon her future career—whether it will prove the same sort of springboard that served Miss Hepburn so well, or merely "just another job."

It has been said that there is no such thing as an "actor proof" part.

Seer's Romantic Forecast 'Intrigues' Hollywood's 19-Year-Old Star

Hollywood, July 20 (AP).—A fortune teller told Laraine Day the other day she soon will have three proposals.

"I wish they'd hurry," she frets. "There isn't one in sight."

If you're 50, with a nice smile, you can be confident of special treatment. The seer described one of these. Laraine doesn't think she'd be seriously interested, but:

"I'm intrigued no end."

Laraine is 19, more than ordinarily attractive, and, in the opinions of numerous well-versed observers is going places in the movie business. Two years hence she wants to be Mrs. Somebody. She thinks 21 a nice age to marry.

She's still studying drama and diction and intends to keep it up. Between films, she keeps busy in Long Beach and Hollywood little theaters.

She acts in the former, directs in the latter, but confesses she's not finding the latter easy.

Sherwood Quit Comedies After 'Mein Kampf'

Turned Pen to Dramas To Attack Aggression, Uphold Democracy

By Mark Barron

New York, July 20 (AP).—Comedy, for long his delightful forte, was quietly exiled upon the shelves along with many other normal facets of civilized life when Robert Emmet Sherwood read Hitler's "Mein Kampf" ten years ago.

He was convinced then that the erstwhile World War corporal meant to attempt to carry out his plan to dominate all Europe, and perhaps all the world.

That was a decision that turned Sherwood's pen away from a path of treating history with tongue in cheek and persuaded him to look with some apprehension upon the future for democratic standards. It also induced him to write a pair of Pulitzer Prize-winning dramas, one denouncing aggression and the other upholding democracy—"Idiot's Delight," in 1936, and "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," in 1939.

Since Eugene O'Neill retreated into an extended period of silence in 1934, Sherwood's works unquestionably have made him the American theater's No. 1 playwright. In addition he is one of the leaders of the Dramatists Guild and founder and coproducer of the Playwrights Producing Company.

"I read 'Mein Kampf' just after I had written the comedy about Viennese life in the days of nobility, 'Reunion in Vienna,' and I decided that Hitler was determined to do what he said he would do," Sherwood said as he lounged his lanky 6 feet 7 inches half way across his office in Rockefeller Center.

"And that was the end for me of all romantic comedies, at least until this constant threat of death to all freedom and democracy in the world is no longer hanging over us. I'm one who took Hitler seriously from the very beginning.

"The Allied leaders knew what Hitler was planning, but they just didn't have the capacity to believe it. They believed just what they wanted to believe and dismissed the rest . . . So that's why I'm not writing a new play now. Instead, I'm writing advertisements."

Sherwood was referring to the advertisements he is writing for the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, of which William Allen White is national chairman.

In these he is, ironically, borrowing liberally of Hitler's own quotes to make his points. Such a one is Hitler's boast: "It will be a simple matter for me to produce unrest and revolts in the United States so that these gentry will have their hands full with their own affairs . . . We shall soon have Storm Troopers in America."

Glen Echo Park Has New Hit in Flying Scooter

A music career inspired by the sheer joy of melody is the story of Jack Torrey, one of Paul Kain's fine Spanish Garden musicians. Born at Rochester, N. Y., just 24 years ago, Torrey says, "I love to play music because it makes me happy"—and we think this is a genuine recipe for the success of a modern swing musician.

Torrey went "professional" in 1934 and in Washington his engagements include long stands at the Roger Smith Hotel, Leon Brusiloff's orchestra, Capitol Theater and Neptune Room. He prefers swing to the classical because he likes the lively variety of music. Torrey says his ultimate ambition is to teach music.

If you stop to chat a while with Jim Fitzpatrick, Paul Kain's prize tenor, it won't be long before you hear about Jim's little girl. In fact, he'll probably pull out a well-handled snapshot as he proudly tells you of his beautiful, curly-haired daughter—the apple of his eye.

Jim made his way through college and law school by playing in dance orchestras in and around Boston, where Boston College and Suffolk Law School are located. After suffering financial reverses, Jim says, "I took up dance music after getting my law degree, because I was hungry." Fitzpatrick has sung in every night spot in Boston. In Washington he is known as "the Irishman from Boston."

Glen Echo dance lovers will find both these fine musicians with Paul Kain's orchestra in the Spanish Garden Ballroom, where dancing is enjoyed nightly from 9 until midnight.

Of Glen Echo's 50 amusement attractions, the new Flying Scooter, from the New York World's Fair, seems to be gaining so much popularity that it may even surpass the Coaster Dips and take first place with the thrill-seekers. The Flying Scooter always has a gallery of interested onlookers on the Roof-Garden Cafe, and as the scooters sail through the air the breeze stirred up is delightful.

Pool Director Hickman reports that the free swimming lessons at the Crystal Pool are now being given daily at regular intervals. It seems that more adults are registered for the free lessons than children.

Luxury Liner Revives Glory Of the Potomac

Ever since Mark Twain wrote his immortal story, "Life On the Mississippi," river travel has presented a picture of pleasant allure.

The Wilson Line, Inc., ever anxious to appease public demand, has scored a bullseye in presenting to the Nation's Capital the new streamliner, S. S. Mount Vernon. In the last decade, many changes have influenced river travel, and it is a far cry from the steamboatin' days of the famous old Charles McAllister to the present-day streamlined comforts offered by this new river liner. With an array of improvements, such as a tiled main deck, comfortable observation lounges, a broad, cool, hurricane deck and an unobstructed, air conditioned dance deck that will accommodate approximately 1,000 dancers, it is little wonder that the popularity of Potomac River cruising has set an all-time record during the past six weeks.

Accommodations provide for 2,400 passengers and three round trips are made daily, leaving at 9:30 in the morning and 2 o'clock in the afternoon for Mount Vernon and Marshall Hall Park, and a Moonlight Cruise nightly, sailing at 8:30.

Yes, steamboatin' on the river is still popular. For a day of carefree enjoyment or an evening of restful relaxation, the Wilson Line has the answer.

Wallace Play At Roadside For Fortnight

Tomorrow night the Roadside will roll on, literally, its most ambitious production of the season, Ian Hay's "The Frog," adapted from one of Edgar Wallace's most exciting and adventurous mystery-thrillers. A cast of 18 and nine complete sets are required for the production. It will run the usual two weeks, through Saturday, August 3.

All of England is terrorized by the activities of a band of criminals. Arson, blackmail, murder and kidnapping are their major crimes. The master mind, whose identity is not even known to his chief lieutenants, is "the frog." And it is up to Scotland Yard, in particular to Sergt. Elk and Inspector Gordon, to break up the gang and capture "the frog" himself.

An excerpt from the London Daily Telegraph's review of "The Frog" described the play as follows: "It is a real Edgar Wallace thriller. It is sensational; it is amusing; it is highly improbable and it is continuously entertaining. My chief impression of 'The Frog' is rattling good fun. It will amuse you rather than give you a sleepless night, for there is little that is gruesome in the play."

The cast of the Roadside production is headed by William Zuckert, in the role of Sergt. Elk, which Gordon Harker made famous in England; Maccubin Waters, as Inspector Gordon; Edna Evans, Kenn Romney, Jean Miller, Edward Prescott, Peter Bedford, A. Alan Fischler, Herbert Lupton and Paul Sears in major roles, and Alice Gartrell, Ray Schreiner, Ted Projector, Joseph Whiteford, Sidney W. Hay, William Hutterly, Tosca Fattorini and Eleanor Reed in supporting parts.

Sex and Violence Scenes Stump Even Most Judicious Censors

Firearm Shots Are Forbidden in Japan, And Chicago Is Touchy About Gangs; English Won't Allow Fallen Horse

By Ted Gill,

Associated Press Feature Writer.

Hollywood, July 20.—This ever-perplexing task of keeping the movies pure . . . and the public satisfied . . . decidedly is no boy's job . . .

Even the best of censors are stumped sometimes on just how far pictures can go in matters of so-called indiscretions and other possible objectionable angles . . . And yet not bring down upon their heads the wrath of certain factions of the public whose finer sensibilities seem to bruise so easily . . .

Of all the various assortments of oddities one encounters around this odd capital of screenland, some of the oddest are found in the censors' plush bottom workshop . . . There it is revealed, quite oddly enough, that sex ranks second to scenes of violence as Hollywood's No. 1 film censorship problem . . .

Most directors film scenes of a dead body only when it's absolutely necessary for sequence identification . . . But even so, almost always censors will scissor it out . . . Firearm scenes are forbidden in some countries, including Japan . . .

Kissing scenes also are taboo in Japan . . . But that's not because of any moral objections . . . Censors say the Japanese just don't understand that a kiss conveys a feeling of love . . . They laugh hilariously and disrupt the show when such a scene is shown . . .

In England, where steeplechasing is a favorite national sport, you can't exhibit a film containing a fallen horse . . . But one showing a girl who may be a little destitute is okay . . . In one picture, a man induced a woman to divorce her husband and marry him . . . But conclusive divorce is frowned upon in England, so all reference to the divorce was deleted . . . But when she and the man began common-law relations, the scene was permitted . . .

South America seems to enjoy most anything but political pictures, the censors report . . . In Peru, theater owners strive to guard women's morals by posting a "not for Senoritas" sign whenever a somewhat spicy film comes along . . . The result, they report, is a mass raid by the feminine sex . . . who crash the doors, if necessary, to get inside . . .

Alfred Block, who puts the "eye" on films produced on the MGM lot and decides what can or cannot be put into the finished strip, says one of the toughest things are bedroom scenes . . . they almost invariably lead to complications . . . And, equally touchy, he says, is just how far a girl can go in the gentle, if delicate, art of undressing before the camera.

Among his more pleasurable moments, Block recalls, was a scene in which he was framed, tricked and otherwise duped . . . It was for a Jean Harlow picture and he was called upon to decide on the amount of body exposure . . . In the midst of it all, he called a halt . . . But Jean kept right on disrobing, while he waved his arms frantically but vainly . . . By the time he realized it was nothing but a gag, his face had turned several shades of deep red . . .

Block, by the way, is regarded as somewhat of an authority on what makes censors unhappy . . . He can't tell producers just what they can do, but he frequently sits down and adjusts a scene properly for a sometimes baffled producer . . . And they usually decide to follow his advice, because there usually is much explaining to be done if scenes which he frowns upon have to be cleaned up a bit after the picture is released . . .

Nearly every censor, it seems, cuts something out of a Marx Brothers picture . . . But almost without exception they scissor different lines of the dialogue . . . The whipping scene in "David Copperfield" got the axe in the Scandinavian countries, where it was considered too cruel.

Who's Whose - - - And When

By Weare Holbrook

They are wearing their honeymoons shorter this year. Since money cannot buy immunity to aerial bombardments and U-boat attacks, even the most affluent newlyweds are foregoing the delights of European travel this summer. The lovebirds-in-a-gilded-cage are quite content to remain indigenous to the Western Hemisphere. As for the more plebian species, economic uncertainty limits their migrations to the conventional round trip with stopover at Niagara Falls.

In fact, by this time the majority are already At Home and wondering what to do with the set of Sir Walter Scott that Cousin Adelbert sent. And the usual social complications are developing a good two months ahead of schedule.

There are, of course, the new relatives to be coped with. The bride must learn to distinguish between Aunt Emma and Aunt Effie, remember which uncles are not to be served cocktails and respect the various conversational taboos of the family. She must strive to give an illusion of wifely capability without seeming too worldly wise, and, with the eyes of the in-laws upon her, tread the narrow path between sophistication and stupidity.

But now the social scene is complicated by more than mere in-laws. There are the out-laws, too—that is, the relatives-by-divorce. It's a rare marriage which does not have a former spouse lurking somewhere in the offing, or, if not a former spouse, then a former parent. The stuffy atmosphere of the law courts mingles with the scent of orange blossoms, and the bride's bouquet is tied with a dainty bow of red tape. Much more attention is paid to her going-away costume than to her coming-back costume.

Marital Reticence Is Gone Forever

A generation ago divorces in the average family were as unusual as midgets. They happened, but only to gay, glamorous creatures in the newspaper headlines, never to the sober, everyday folks whom one knew personally.

It wasn't that the course of true love ran smoother in those days. There were probably just as many domestic disputes and deceptions per capita as there are now. But people had a reticence then which no longer exists. They kept their troubles to themselves. It was an era of nonventilation; neither bedrooms nor grievances were aired.

When a wife suspected her husband of any extra-marital peccadilloes—and some of those old boys pecked a mean dillo in their day—she did not broadcast her suspicions or seek the services of a private detective agency. She merely got grim. And when a husband was galled by the shackles which bound him to a shrewish wife, he didn't break away and go to live at his club; he simply endured them and eventually developed callouses.

This Spartan attitude often manifested itself in ways that might have proved puzzling to a psychiatrist, if there had been any around. It was to a large extent responsible for such introvert hobbies as building ship models in bottles, carving cherry stones and drinking behind the barn. Much of the masculine fondness for solitary hunting and fishing expeditions can be traced to it. As for the injured wife, she could find solace in the voluminous literature of various gastro-philosophical cults and wreak revenge on her erring spouse by serving him Brazil-nut cutlets and eggplant steaks.

'Silent Treatment' Divorce Substitute

Sometimes the "silent treatment" served as a substitute for divorce. A violent quarrel would leave a couple literally speechless with rage—and speechless they would remain, long after the rage had subsided. As a boy I often visited the Weeversnags, a kindly old couple who lived next door. Mrs. Weeversnag was generous with watermelon pickles and caraway-seed cookies, and Mr. Weeversnag used to regale me with reminiscences of the prerailroad days when he drove a stagecoach. But Mrs. Weeversnag never spoke directly to her husband, nor he to her; they communicated with each other through the medium of Minnie, the hired girl. At the dinner table, Mrs. W. would say, "Minnie, ask him if he wants another helping of mashed potatoes." And Mr. W. would say, "Thank you, Minnie. Tell her to put a spoonful of peas on the side, too."

Finally, one day Aunt Eulalie, overcome by curiosity, was bold enough to ask Mrs. Weeversnag why she had never spoken to her husband these many years.

"He did something I didn't like," said Mrs. W.

"I can't believe it was anything so very dreadful," Aunt Eulalie persisted. "He seems like such a nice man." Then, breathlessly, "What was it?"

"Landsakes, I don't know!" sighed Mrs. W. "It happened so long ago I've clean forgot!"

But the wall of silence between the Weeversnags remained, solid unto death.

There are few walls of silence, however, in the family feuds of today. Acoustics get better by the minute. Newspapers still publish those plaintive little announcements reading, "My wife having left my bed and board, I will not be responsible," etc.—but it is only a perfunctory gesture, the friends and acquaintances of the persons involved knew all about it long before they read the paper.

Time was when concrete evidence was necessary in a divorce action: the plaintiff usually had to produce either a black eye or a blonde. But now that "mental cruelty" has been recognized as adequate grounds, the field is open.

Faith in Human Ill-Nature Is Shaken

Mental cruelty, or psychological sadism, can be anything from whistling off-key to smiling enigmatically at breakfast. When Harold and Elinor Billipson got married everybody though it would be a perfect love match. Harold had courted Elinor for years; he used to carry a lock of her hair tied with a light blue ribbon in a wallet next to his heart. But the romance went on the racks within six months after the wedding, because Elinor was mentally cruel to Harold.

"She always combed her hair over the wash-bowl," he explained. "She did it on purpose. And if there's anything I can't stand, it's trying to remove a long black hair from a cake of moist soap."

But though marriages are impermanent nowadays, divorces are even more so. One would assume that if two people are mad enough at each other to get divorced, they would stay mad for a while—at least until their friends become accustomed to the idea. There are regulations prohibiting professional baseball players from "fraternizing" with members of opposing teams. However crooked a prize fight may be, the principals are required to maintain a pretense of animosity while in the ring. Political candidates devote themselves wholeheartedly to telling the world how wrong their rivals are.

Divorced couples, however, lack this sense of showmanship. They go through the Reno routine mechanically and continue to be just good pals thereafter, exuding sweet reasonableness from every pore. They have no consideration for the public, which is eagerly awaiting a display of old-fashioned hostility. It's enough to shake one's faith in human ill-nature.

Thus the question as to Who's Whose grows ever more perplexing. Perhaps the best solution of the problem would be to adopt the Hollywood method whereby a woman retains the same name throughout her varied matrimonial career. Though Fairbankses and Tones may come and go, Joan remains Joan Crawford.

But, in the meantime—a little more venom, please.

Director Fritz Lang Solves Problem of Hollywood's Sun

By Hubbard Keavy.

Hollywood, July 20 (AP).—The fellow who wrote the script put in a lot of dialog and a couple of preliminary scenes about Frank James holding up a train at sunset. And so the impending hold-up at sunset was planted thoroughly an irrevocably in the dialog.

When it came time to film the hold-up, just about everybody discovered all at once that it couldn't be. The mountain was there and the train was here and the setting sun was 'way over there, back of the camera! It looked like "The Return of Frank James" was in for a spell of retakes.

But the worriers reckoned without the ingenuity of Fritz Lang, the director. He said we'll film it in the morning, when the sun is rising, and if we do it real quick and with the right filters no one will ever know the difference. And I'll betcha you won't.

Walter Bradfield, part of whose job is to tell about the charms of the charming Steffi Duna, is telling now about how Steffi got back into the cinema.

Seems she was without a job and was all but forgotten. A director, looking for a girl for a part in his film, was sitting in a projection room more or less patiently waiting for a messenger to deliver some film tests. Well, the messenger finally showed up and, instead of a can of tests he was supposed to have picked up at another studio, he bought a can containing the short film, "La Cucarracha." Steffi played in that, about seven years ago.

You can guess the rest, about Steffi getting the job and a flock of others. Always looking for the still-brighter side, I inquired the name of the messenger boy and wondered how handsomely Steffi had rewarded him for his mistake.

Mr. Bradfield said, no. Steffi hadn't found him, but that if it would make the story any better, she would. I didn't press it because I had a date to talk to a man about yak hair.

* * * *

That's right, yak hair. George H. (The H is not for Hirsute) Thomas buys hair for one of the studios. He was having a time trying to get enough, about a quarter ton of it, to cover chins of alleged hillibillies in "Comin' Round the Mountain."

He used to get plenty of it from importers who got it from Austria and Germany, where peasant women, he says, comb and brush and oil their locks for the movies. When they get a headful, they go to market, have it clipped and before long it gets to Hollywood, ready to be trimmed and pasted by a Westmore onto some willing chin.

Thomas looked and looked and finally found an importer who had a bale of yak hair, sent from Asia. It's just as satisfactory as human hair and the extras wearing it didn't know the difference. This just goes to show you that a yak has some other use than filling in the spaces beginning with 16 perpendicular.

The humanizing effect of the movies:

They were fairly well along into the filming of the movie "Brigham Young," portraying the life and the times and wives of that Mormon, when someone decided he had to be "humanized." So they wrote in some extra scenes, showing Dean Jagger (he's Brigham) milking a cow, pinning a diaper on a baby, shoeing a horse and doctoring a goat.

Whoever wrote those scenes wasn't very original. He just copped ideas Presidential aspirants have been using for years.

There was to have been a paragraph or two here reporting on Actor Donald Crisp's continuing unsuccessful experiments to grow blue roses, but he got sidetracked on a matter of another color.

He was more concerned the other day with his recent discovery that there are hardly any more blondes in Hollywood. He remembers a few years ago when there were eight very blonde blondes on every corner and now, he says, you only see about one blonde per square mile. And she's a kind of dark blonde. Well, that's what Crisp says, and not too crisply. This passing of the blonde is worth investigating.

Some other time I'll tell you about Crisp's blue roses that always die just when they're ready to bloom.

Shrine to Be Cruise Stop

John W. Mulford, president of the Seaway Lines, announces that Midland, Ontario, site of the famed Jesuit Martyr's Shrine, has been added to the ports of call of the S. S. Georgian, which sails from Detroit each Saturday night on weekly cruises of Georgian Bay and the North Channel. This stop will replace Owen Sound. Collingwood and Wasaga Beach will be continued on the stops. Midland is steeped in history with the famed shrine, the outstanding tourist stop on the Great Lakes. It is the visiting place of many pilgrims.

IN THE GARDENER'S CORNER

Shaded Lawn Requires Extra Care

Thinning Crowns Of Trees Helps Sod Flourish

By Alfred Putz

The shaded lawn needs as much, perhaps even more, care during the summer as one exposed to full sun. While it is true that during the torrid summer those areas exposed to the full rays of the sun are likely to show injury first, while the shaded spots are still quite green, the former recuperate more quickly once cool autumn days bring adequate rainfall. Once the shaded lawn has turned brown, the chances are that many plants will find it impossible to rally, making fall reseeding imperative. However, good care of the shaded lawn during the summer will preserve its beauty.

One must realize that there is a wide difference between those shaded lawns that receive ample indirect light from the sky and others that are deprived of adequate light, as is the case under dense trees. The degree of plant growth is proportionate to the light available. Often the removal of some of the lower tree limbs will be found helpful in admitting more side light. Thinning the crowns of the trees is a temporary measure well worth while.

Most difficult is the management where dense forenoon shade alternates with full exposure to the sun, while the reverse rather helps the lawn, as shade is cast when the days approach their maximum temperature.

Type of Grass Affects Problem

The type of grass also has a lot to do with the problem. In dry shade, such as on slopes, sandy soil or under trees, a mixture of four parts red fescue, or Chewing's fescue, with one part Rhode Island bent grass should be considered whenever any reseeding is to be done. Where the soil remains moderately moist, rough-stalked meadow grass (Boa trivialis), which, despite its name is a good lawn grass if cut regularly, should be used for reseeding shaded spots that were started with a good general shade mixture.

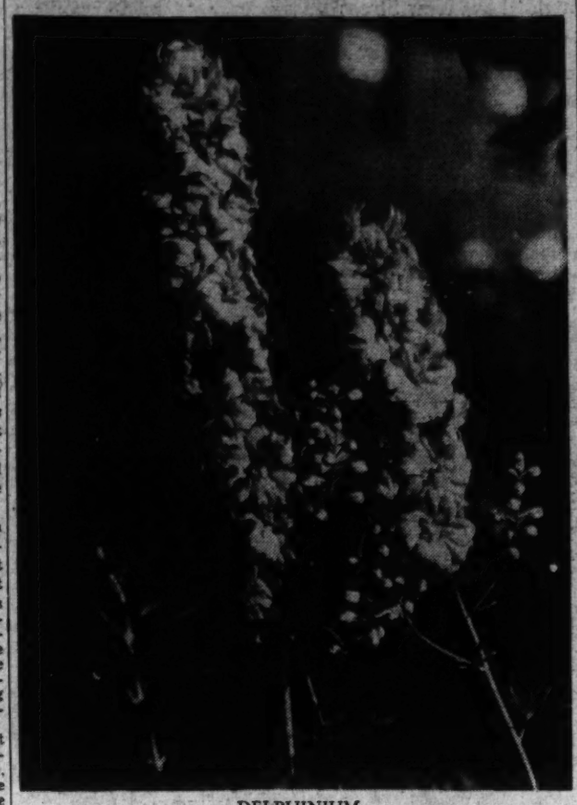
Since grass plants are 85 per cent water, the need for an adequate moisture content of the soil is evident. Water, in fact, is the most important factor, particularly since virtually all garden soils contain at least some food elements, though the supply may not suffice to give the best results. Out of 18 elements essential to the growth of grass plants, three—nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash—are the ones most frequently lacking. On the other had, since the amateur gardener cannot tell whether the other 15 are present in sufficient quantity, it is wise to select a really complete plant food, or fertilizer. No fertilizer, however, can function properly without the moisture necessary to dissolve it, because plants cannot absorb solids.

Shade Permits Early Watering

The shaded lawn presents an advantage in watering, in that the sprinkler may be applied at almost any hour except the early afternoon. Being out of reach of the sun's rays, the drops that fall upon the blades will not heat up to the point where they would scald the tissues. Thorough watering is of the greatest importance; with every application the moisture should penetrate to a depth of 4 inches and 6 inches is much better. The only way to tell if the moisture has reached that depth is by a trial with the trowel. Once the test has been made and the time for proper penetration noted, it will be a guide to future watering. The question as to the frequency of application cannot be answered with a definite figure, because soil conditions and temperatures vary. There is no need for daily sprinkling, as the roots cannot stand a perpetually water-soaked soil. They must have air to breathe. Once a week should suffice, except during exceptionally hot and dry periods of prolonged duration.

Where the soil is known to be rather poor, the watering may be preceded once a month by a very light application of a complete, well balanced plant food or fertilizer. These applications must be very scant, as overfeeding the lawn in shaded areas may bring grief. Nitrogen that cannot be absorbed by plants may prove toxic to them. In shaded areas under trees this method provides a continuous supply of food and encourages a vigorous growth, despite the fact that the tree roots are inclined to absorb quite a bit of food. Utmost care must be taken to apply the food while the grass blades are perfectly dry, otherwise the fertilizer may stick to them and cause severe burning.

Cold Frames or Flats Help Perennials Survive in Heat



DELPHINIUM

A shaded nursery bed will safeguard this favorite through Washington's summer heat.

Nursery Beds Are Most Satisfactory For Transplanting as They Eliminate Further Moving of Shrubs Until Spring

By Crowell Baynes.

Gardeners who have seeded perennials or who will do so this month, need to make preparations for getting them through the remainder of the hot weather. If there are only one or two lots with not more than 20 or 30 plants in a lot, a good sized flat or two filled with fertile and friable earth that will hold water well may be the most convenient arrangement for transplanting the seedlings. This will give them space to grow into strong plants for fall or spring planting. Plants transplanted to a flat now will probably be ready either for fall planting or for transfer to a coldframe before cold weather.

If there are more than 50 plants, it is usually more satisfactory to prepare a nursery bed. If well placed, the bed will care for hardy plants until spring without another moving.

Do Not Thrive In Capital's Heat

Most professional plant growers care for seedlings either in small pots in the greenhouse or planted in soil of a coldframe. This calls for more continuous attention than many amateurs are willing or able to give, both in watering and in providing shade.

But most of the good perennials do not thrive in either the heat or full sun of a Washington summer. They may do splendidly in full sun when well started, but their root systems develop much more slowly than most of the annuals and they need considerable shade both to reduce transpiration from the leaves and to check drying out of the soil around the young roots. But good drainage is also necessary. The soil should be moist, fairly fertile, and well drained. Most garden soil will bake and crust more than is desirable.

To provide really desirable quarters for seedlings, a gardener will find it worth while to make an elevated bed filled with specially prepared soil. A rough framework three feet wide and as long as needed to care for the plants can be knocked together quickly from six-inch boards and set on the surface of the ground. A frame three feet square will care for about 200 seedlings until fall or 120 till spring.

Place such a frame where it will be shaded at least half the day, but will get some direct sunlight. If placed along a north wall, set it out two feet or so to allow some morning and afternoon sun. Perhaps the best placement is to the north of a lattice that allows rather less than half sun from the south. One thoroughly satisfactory nursery bed was to the north of a rose trellis composed of thin one-inch vertical slats spaced one inch apart, with a little rose foliage that cut off some more of the direct sun.

Fill such a frame with soil mixed to order, with equal parts of fertile and friable garden soil, sifted leafmold or compost, granulated peat, and plaster sand. The soil and leafmold supply fertility. The leafmold and peat absorb and release moisture. The sand lightens the soil and makes it easy for roots to run. The peat, leafmold and sand prevent caking, and if slightly moist, stick together well around the roots when time for transplanting comes. A bushel of each of these materials well mixed will make about enough soil to fill a frame three feet square.

Coldframe A Substitute

If no south shade is convenient, a coldframe with six inches of similar soil covered with a lath shade in place of glass is second choice. But an open nursery allows better circulation of air.

In putting seedlings in such a nursery bed, space the rows about three inches apart. If the plan is to leave the seedlings until spring, space them three inches apart in the row. If they are to be transplanted to the garden this fall, two inches will not be too crowded. An excellent way of managing seedlings in a nursery bed is to place them two inches apart now and transplant alternate plants to the garden this fall, leaving the other half for spring transplanting, and covering the nursery bed in fall with a movable coldframe. Such treatment ought to practically insure good results from one batch or the other, and probably from both.

For watering such a bed, sink five three-inch flower pots, one in the center and one half-way between the center and the corners of a three-foot square bed. By filling the pots with water several times the bed will be well watered without washing of the soil or crusting. This provides almost the equivalent of immersing a seed pan in water to allow the moisture to soak up from the bottom.

Such a shaded nursery bed has proved thoroughly desirable in Washington for many of the perennial favorites—delphiniums, peachbells, dianthus, primulas, several varieties of lilies left for a second season, perennial alyssum, harebells, for transplanting of rooted cuttings of azaleas and box, for columbines, pansies, sweet violets, marguerites, cleamatis, daylily seedlings, funkia, perennial gypsophila, wallflowers, Oriental poppies, pyrethrum, gaillardia, and coral bells among others. The sunnier corners have been convenient for the stronger growing biennials, foxglove, Canterbury bells, hollyhocks and sweet William which were ready to move out in early fall to make space for the later seedings of perennials.

In proportion to the space and labor involved, no part of the garden and no garden equipment has proved more highly productive than a nursery bed raised enough to insure drainage and sheltered from sun and heat. When a few rows are cleared it is easy to "spade" the bed with a trowel and add enough mixed soil to make up for the balls taken out in transplanting to the garden.

Gardeners Calendar

If Japanese beetles are causing serious injury, consult Federal Bureau of Entomology, or beetle headquarters at College Park, reporting without exaggeration. Then follow suggestions for spraying, poisoning or trapping.

Last planting of gladioli may be made now, but new corms may not ripen.

Order oriental popples and madonna lilies. Mandonna lilies may be planted as soon as received from dealers.

Plant pansies, sweet william, hollyhocks, biennial wallflowers, English daisies.

Order any spring flowering bulbs as soon as possible. Lack of tulip supply this year is sure to cause shortage of all desirable substitutes.

Keep garden well weeded and cultivated and apply mulches to keep soil cool and moist and reduce need for cultivation.

Recently planted roses should not be forced with heavy feeding the first season. Older plants can make use of tonic feedings as soon as they are active again.

Prune climbing roses, discarding old wood and letting new shoots run.

Divide roots of Oriental poppies as soon as first signs of renewed growth appear.

Stake dahlias and keep them tied in good form.

Remove faded flowers of hollyhocks and phlox and promote renewed bloom later in season.

Foreign Bulbs To Be Scarce, Gardeners Told

Outlook for Tulips Is Poor; Narcissus Will Be Plentiful

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

The gardening year has rolled around and it is now time to think again of spring gardens and bulb orders. Gardeners are inquiring about the bulb market and what the chances are for foreign bulbs. There seems scant hope that there will be but few foreign bulbs available. In some cases the American market can supply a good percentage, but with tulips the outlook is gloomy and home gardeners are being advised to take good care of their home stocks and try to increase their existing collection by replanting and caring for the new bulblets.

Horticulture Magazine, in a recent number, says there are "approximately 10,000,000 tulip bulbs in the United States, as against the 100,000,000 normally imported from Holland. Moreover, 90 per cent of the 10,000,000 available consist of foreign varieties such as the William Copeland, William Pitt and Brighton."

With narcissus the picture is much brighter, for the embargo placed on narcissus by the American Government about 15 years ago to keep out certain diseases and pests has resulted in greatly enlarged stocks. At the time of the embargo prices soared and there was much grumbling among narcissus enthusiasts, for the embargo came at a time when Americans were becoming aware of their value. Soon many Dutch and English growers established narcissus gardens in this country and American growers added greatly to their stocks. As a result the American market has been supplied largely by American-grown narcissus.

D. C. Gardeners Are Fortunate

Gardeners in this locality are particularly fortunate. Through the Garden Club of Virginia Narcissus Show each year in Alexandria, and in other nearby shows, local gardeners have become familiar with the many types which give variety and long blooming period. They have become acquainted with the commercial growers and the varieties in which they specialize and in the new varieties they have produced. Many have visited the extensive narcissus gardens in the Tidewater section of Virginia, where the number of bulb gardens has earned for that area the title of "Little Holland."

In visiting last spring's shows it was found that old varieties were holding their own with new and expensive productions. In Alexandria Mrs. John Hooag, John Evelyn, Thalia, Beersheba carried blues in the specimen classes. Others which seemed worthy of note were Hades (which many thought the finest in the show); Noblesse, a giant yellow; Distingue, Candlelight, Golden Sunrise, Twink, Chiltern, a large white trumpet of unusual beauty, and R. M. Tobin, a large bi-color with orange cup. Rockery Beauty was a dainty yellow trumpet—very tiny — and Waterei another lovely small bloom, white with green center. March Sunshine, a very early yellow triandus, was much admired, as was Beryl, a Poeticus with its gold and yellow coloring. In the whites, which are always favorites and very effective in the spring garden, were Moonshine, quite like the Thalia and Agnes Harver, a triandus of purest white.

Tinkle Distinctive In Coloring

Mme. Van Waveren, in the Van Waveren exhibit, was lovely with a cream periantn and pale yellow cup. Tinkle, a poeticus of pale apricot with an orange cup, was distinct in coloring and had a fine fragrance which should make it additionally welcome to the garden. Roxane, a creamy white trumpet, excited interest, as did the Franciscus Drake, a bi-color leedsii. Most of these varieties are available at nearby nurseries and seedsmen.

An interesting announcement has been made that the annual show of the National Capitol Dahlia Society will be held this year at the Shoreham Hotel. John L. Bishop will be general chairman of the show and has announced that in addition to the exhibits of dahlias, the show will include exhibits of other flowers and special featured arrangement classes.

Mrs. E. H. McKeon, former president of the Maryland Federation of Garden Clubs, was the recipient of the purple ribbon for horticultural achievement given by the National Council of Garden Clubs. The presentation was made at the recent annual meeting of the national council in Portsmouth, N. H. The Virginia federation was given honorable mention in the contest for the giving of awards to roadside stands which meet requirements for beauty ad clanliness set by the national council. An interesting feature of the meeting was the exhibit of floral arrangement from every State. North Carolina had an arrangement of wild flowers in a splint basket. Among the rare specimens were red and yellow pitcher plant and the Venus fly trap. Georgia had an arrangement of magnolia grandiflora in a bronze bowl, with Georgia peaches for color accent. Arizona sent cactus, and most of the arrangements were typical of the State from which they came.

The Brighter Side - - - By Damon Runyon

Our old man said if he had the authority he would save this country thousands of lives and millions and millions of dollars and much grief every year by just attending to the things that nobody does anything about. He said he meant attending to these things before something happened.

He said as a minor illustration, take that fire which had just destroyed an old building on lower Santa Fe avenue right there in our old home town of Pueblo, resulting in the injury of several persons. Our old man said everybody knew that building had been a fire menace for years but that nobody had done anything about it.

He said things like that existed all over the United States of America. He said everywhere there were countless menaces to life and limb and property that were common knowledge but that nobody did anything about. He said he could find in every community the most appalling threats to public health of which everybody was aware but that nobody did anything about.

Our old man said even worse than the physical threats, however, were the moral menaces that nobody did anything about. He said he could go into hundreds of cities and towns and find corruption in the municipal governments and vice and other violations of law in all quarters which were familiar to everybody but that nobody did anything about.

He said he could probably find organizations inimical to the public peace and amity that everybody knew would sooner or later cause a lot of trouble but that nobody did anything about. He said even in national affairs there were omissions and abuses that were so generally recognized that they were the subject of occasional comment and criticism in the newspapers but that nobody did anything about them.

Our old man said of course he did not figure that he could do all the work himself of attending to the things that nobody does anything about. He said he would want a separate department of the Government set up under his administration, like the War Department, with branches and agents all over the country.

He said it would be the duty of these agents to remedy the things that nobody does anything about, such as river levees that would not hold back floods, and loose-swinging signs that were a menace to pedestrians, and dangerous railroad crossings, and faulty building constructions, and polluted water supply and indifference and neglect in public office.

He said his agents would have an easy job because all they would have to do would be to wander about the various communities in which they were stationed and listen to the casual conversation of the citizens of the things that nobody did anything about. He said there would be no detective work attached to their positions as there is always casual conversation in a community of the things that nobody does anything about.

Our old man said of course he would have to have a very large appropriation, especially for legal purposes, because it had been his observation that a great many things that nobody does anything about exist mainly because of the opposition of selfish interests. He said several times he had quietly investigated the reasons for the existence of public menaces of one kind and another that were common knowledge and that nobody did anything about and that he had found that nobody did anything about them because they were supported by selfish interests that were difficult to overcome.

He said he wanted a legal staff attached to his department so he could put representatives of interests such as that in the jail house. He said he supposed to he would have to spend a large sum of money in the conduct of his department but that he had figured out where in one single detail, he would still save the country money, no matter how much he spent.

Our old man said that this one detail was the cost of the investigations that invariably follow the things that nobody does anything about when something finally happens.

RADIO

Two new programs which have brought some happy novelty to the summer air. At the left, Joe Kelly beleaguers tiny Shirley Ward on Quiz Kids, that remarkable new half-hour heard each Friday on WRC at 9:30 p. m. Below, Danny Kaye and Joan Edwards dramatize that sequence of Forecast which takes you back to "When You Were 21;" Forecast is broadcast on Monday evenings at 8 on WJSV

Hearing Ahead

By Richard L. Coe

With a 7-year-old who can out-Kieran Kieran and a group of authors ranging from Sinclair Lewis to Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, two new programs have brightened our summer firmament no end of recent weeks.

The first of these is the 3-week-old Quiz Kids, heard locally each Friday evening at 9:30 over WRC while the second is the ambitious Forecast, the second of which will be heard tomorrow evening on WJSV at 8 o'clock.

Unless you've already heard it—and that certainly isn't our fault—you'll hardly believe how fascinating Quiz Kids is. It's a sort of juvenile Information Please with its experts aging from 5 to 15 and selected by stiff preliminary examinations. In the series, the three with the top scores remain on the program until knocked off. The losing two drop out to be replaced the following week by others who've passed the exams. The top trio gets $100 in United States Bonds apiece, those eliminated receive $50 bonds. Educators, artists and professional folk appear as guests for the children, Painter Grant Wood being the latest of these.

The well-rounded knowledge of these anything but coy little people will astound you and must cause the celebrated Information Please Board endless pangs. They know the story of Arachne, the spider-woman; they can spell heterogeneous and antimacassar and give definitions. They know the names of the planets, the fast-changing shapes of European countries; they can reason that "maitre d'hotel" might mean "mother of the hotel," which certainly is near enough to be practically right!

When one of the lads, 7-year-old Gerard Darrow, disagreed with the judges on the call of a robin he said he couldn't whistle it, but that he could hum it. Hum it he did, and more effectively than the original whistler in getting a robin across he was, too. Gerard calmly spelled succinctly for Master of Ceremonies Joe Kelly Friday before last and then called him on his pronunciation of it. Eighth-grade graduate Kelly eventually allowed that Gerard of the seven summers was right.

Movie starlet Jane Withers sent in a question which didn't stump them a bit: There are four necessary qualifications to be President of the United States. If three of these are that (1) he be a native of the United States, (2) he be over 35 years of age, and (3) he shall have resided in this country for the last 16 years, what is the fourth? Now the answer's a bit upsetting, but if Jane of cinemaland thought to catch them napping she was wrong, for before you could wrinkle a brow the Quiz Kids had it. He's got to be elected!

Only criticism in this show is the length of the commercials. The plugs for alka selzer are far too graphic, far too long. It's a shame the advertisers can't realize that such an original program has no need for lengthy plugging. You remember the exceptional. Once over lightly would be enough.

Columbia's Forecast is an outgrowth of the Pursuit of Happiness, wintertime airing which, among other things, introduced the stirring "Ballad for Americans" one memorable Sunday afternoon. That pip of an air show grew out of a desire for escape from the war talk and employed such top-flight stars that its transfer to the advertising-filled commercials would have tried the most lavish sponsor. It took the time following the Carnegie Hall Concerts of the New York Philharmonic Symphony and when that estimable organization took itself to Lewisohn Stadium for the summer, Pursuit of Happiness went off the air.

But is provided C. B. S. program director Wilbur Bennett Lewis with a pack of ideas to fill the hour vacated for the summer by the Lux Radio Theater and Cecil B. DeMille. In its eight weeks of life Forecast will offer 12 half-hour and two full-hour shows. On each of six Mondays, one production will come from New York for half an hour and another from Hollywood for the remaining half-hour. One of the two full-hour shows will be an original production for Barytone Paul Robeson and Comic Eddie Greene by Earl Robinson, composer of "Ballad for Americans."

Tomorrow night that master of film suspense, Alfred Hitchcock, will see what he can do with the wireless medium, adapting Mrs. Belloc Lowndes' chill classic, "The Lodger," for Herbert Marshall as narrator-star. If Hitchcock's genius can make itself felt on the ether, this should be an event. The New York presentation will feature "When You Were 21," designed to recreate a year when some listener, who has written a prize letter, was 21. Songs, books, news events of that year will form the basis of that half-hour, with Danny Kaye and Joan Edwards doing the chores.

Sooner or later on this forecast Ginger Rogers will play Sinclair Lewis' "Bethel Merriday;" "Of Stars and States" will salute various States by native stars; Charles Laughton and his witty wife Elsa Lanchester will costar in "Double Feature;" Edward Everett Horton will be P. G. Wodehouse's Jeeves; "The State of the Nation" will be Earl Robinson's follow-up to his "Ballad for Americans." No doubt about it, if Forecast is half as good as it sounds, it'll be bright listening.

MONDAY: 7:15 p. m., WOL—If your name is Marshall, Dr. Pedigree will tell you 15 minutes' worth about your family and its connections on Who Are You? 7:30, WRC — Margaret Speaks sings music from two Sigmund Romberg operettas, "Maytime" and "The New Moon." 8, WJSV—The afore-touted Forecast! 9, WRC—Nathaniel Shilkret takes up the baton for that Contented program which emphasizes the music of foreign lands. 11 a. m., WMAL—June Forrest, soprano; Henrietta Schumann, pianist, and Jan Williams, clarinetist, are soloists with the Radio City Music Hall String Quartet. Miss Schumann opens the program with Jacques Gasselin, first violin, and Gaston Dubois, cello of the quartet, playing Mendelssohn's trio in D minor. Miss Forrest sings "Comin' Through the Rye," "Little Polly Flanders," by Diack, and "Do Not Go My Love," by Richard Hageman. The quartet plays Bridge's arrangement for the "Londonderry Air" and, with Mr. Williams, Mozart's quintet for clarinet and strings.

11:30, WRC—Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia and Maj. Elmer Haslett, director of New York's magnificent LaGuardia Field, are guest speakers on Wings Over America, devoted to the development of commercial aviation in this country.

1:30 p. m., WRC—With Hitler still poised for his British Blitzkrieg, Chicago still shaking from the events of Thursday evening's Vice-Presidential nomination, Mexico awaiting the repercussions of a hectic election day and Ireland fearing that Nazi land will strike through her at England, the University of Chicago's Round Table admits itself stumped. One of these matters is as likely as anything else to occupy the learned beside Lake Michigan.

2, WOL—An hour's centenary celebration from San Diego Mission. This broadcast marks the 100th anniversary of the appointment of the first bishop of upper California. The ceremony includes an outdoor pageant, concluding with a solemn Pontifical Mass with Archbishop John J. Cantwell, of Los Angeles, reading the dedication. Music by the massed Georgian choirs of Santa Barbara, Los Angeles and San Luis Rey includes Georgian chants of eight centuries ago.

2, WRC—Charles Holland, youthful Negro tenor whose recent debut on the West Coast network was the occassion for high praise from the critics, launches a new series of weekly airings with Charles Dant directing the NBC orchestra. Burleigh's "I Stood On De Ribber Jordan," Fox's "The Hills of Home" and the ever-popular "Chanson Triste" are on his program.

2, WJSV—Howard Barlow programs the works of two contemporary composers for his Columbia Broadcasting symphony concert. First of these is the late Charles Martin Loeffler's "Pagan Poem," one of the Alsatian-American's best-known scores. The second is the suite, "Hary Janos," by the Hungarian Zoltan Kodaly, "Hary Janos" being a character in Hungarian folk-lore comparable to Baron Munchausen. Nicolai's overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" opens the concert while Schubert's "Unfinished" symphony is the penultimate number.

2:15, WMAL—The Foreign Policy Association devotes its illuminating quarter-hour to the current Pan-American conference in Havana with a talk by Howard J. Trueblood, its Latin American expert, speaking from the Cuban capital.

3:30, WJSV—Cicero's "De Officiis," that essay in which the Roman orator, philosopher and politician advised his son on the duties of a free citizen, is the subject of the ninth Invitation to Learning. Princeton's Prof. Allan Tate, of the English department, joins President Stringfellow Barr, of St. John's College, and Baltimore attorney Huntington Cairns in evaluating the effect of Cicero's writings on the thoughts of America's founding fathers.

3:30, WRC—Ernest Hutcheson, the distinguished American pianist and teacher, plays Chaikovski's concerto for piano and orchestra in B flat minor in his appearance as first soloist of the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra's Sunday afternoon series, Albert Stoessel conducting.

4:30, WJSV—Mr. and Mrs. John Kirby, the Mrs. being tiny scatstress Maxine Sullivan, swing into Flow Gently Sweet Rhythm. "Zoomin' at the Zombie" and the sextet from Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor" are the highspots. The Golden Gate foursome does one of its story spirituals.

5, WJSV—Stage-Screen Star Glenda Farrell, Author Max Eastman and Sports Editor Jimmy Powers take their literary knowledge to Sigmund Spaeth's Fun in Print.

6:30, WJSV—Carol Bruce has bounced to musical comedy fame in "Louisiana Purchase" and now she tries to unsnarl detecto doings in Ellery Queen's "The Adventure of the Treasure Hunt."

7, WMAL—Edwin McArthur, who will conduct at the Watergate in the near future, completes his series with the N. B. C. Orchestra. Three Wagnerian selections, the march from "Tannhauser" and the preludes to acts one and three of "Lohengrin;" Brahms' Hungarian dances; Bizet's "L'Arlesienne" suite, and Chabrier's "Espana" rhapsody are programmed.

7, WJSV—Here's a tall story to out-tower all tall stories: "The Canvas Kisser," a Columbia Workshop story of a conk-crushing kangaroo who could have taken on Joe Louis, Jack Dempsey, Jim Jeffries and Jess Willard. But he meets a lady light-heavyweight champ . . .

7, WOL—What is the Outlook for the 1940 Campaign? Republican and Democratic leaders tackle this hot question on The American Forum of the Air. Solicitor General Francis Biddle; Representatives Sam Rayburn, of Texas; Henry B. Steagall, of Alabama; Everett M. Dirksen, of Illinois; Jesse Wallcott, of Michigan and C. Wayland Brooks are in the gathering open to the public in the Willard Hotel.

8, WJSV—If it rains today blame it on the Summer Sunday Evening Hour. The powers that be on this program have the idea that it would be "cheerful" to have a rainy day sketch with Jessica Dragonette, James Newill and Leith Stevens devoting their talents to "Singin' in the Rain," "Rain on the Roof" and "Call Me Up Some Rainy Afternoon." It just better not rain, that's all we can say.

9:05, WOL—Henry Weber's Symphony Hour offers Marion Claire singing "Could I?" by Paola Tosti, and Friml's sorely tried L'Amour Toujours, etc." Col. Robert McCormick, of the Chicago Tribune, is again guest speaker.

10, WJSV—American commentators in the British Isles have had difficulty in clearing communication channels to air this postponed roundup of British preparations against Nazi invasion. Edward R. Murrow will be in London; Vincent Sheean in Cardiff, Wales; Arthur Menken in Belfast, Eire; Erland Echlin in Glasgow, Scotland; Eric Sevareid in Manchester and Larry Leseuer in Bristol.

10, WOL—This one's called Wings for America, the "for" differentiating it from N. B. C.'s Wings Over America heard earlier in the day. It's a connected dramatization of fifth column activities in this country and costars Elissa Landi and Phillips Holmes.

It's Cold on Those Air Lanes!

Benay Venuta, popular songstress who discusses the importance of her sex on the air in the accompanying artical, here exhibits what the well-dressed ether chanteuse wraps herself in of a summer evening

Radio Songstress Boasts of Women's Rise on the Air

(A promising figure on the air, Miss Venuta made her first substantial success when she replaced the Hollywood-bound Ethel Merman in the Cole Porter musical, "Anything Goes." She then was heard on her own network variety hour and created one of the leading roles in the Clare Boothe satire, "Kiss the Boys Good-bye." Now at the top of the heap, Miss Venuta's melting mezzo is a feature of the Hour of Smiles, the Abbott and Costello program, heard Wednesday evenings at 8 over WRC).

By Benay Venuta

The well-known adage "behind every successful man there's a woman," is easily applied to radio. Except that I would word it "on almost every successful radio program, there's a woman."

Not so many years ago that comment would have been laughable. Women had a place in radio, yes. On the morning programs, with hints to the housewife and possibly as staff pianists who filled in when there was a wait of a few minutes between programs. Any other chore would have been the exception rather than the rule.

Today, as a famous politician once said, it's a horse of another color. Let's review the facts: the most successful comedy programs of last season were those of Jack Benny, Fred Allen, Bob Hope and Edgar Bergen. The first three feature, respectively, Mary Livingstone, Portland Hoffa and Brenda and Cobina. Charley McCarthy, it may be said, has had his funniest moments with a female foil.

Of the variety programs, Kate Smith's show was tops. Bing Crosby always had at least one feminine guest, while Fannie Brice made history on the Good News series.

At least two of the audience-participation shows get assistance from the fair sex: Arlene Francis stars on "What's My Name?" and Julia Sanderson on the Battle of the Sexes.

As a matter of fact, the only top-notch radio program which is entirely male in set-up is "Information, Please"—and even those sacred pastures have been frequently invaded (by request) by feminine guests. Of course, there are many singers, classical and popular, whose names are well-known to radio listeners. The popular orchestra leaders are largely dependent on their songstresses. There are only three top-flight maestros I can think of who don't use girl singers: Guy Lombardo, Sammy Kaye and Wayne King.

What I would really like to do some time in the not-too-distant future is to buy a small local radio station. It will be manned (or should I say 'womanned'?) completely by women—engineers, sound effects, writers, production executives, announcers, singers, musicians, actresses and comediennes. Advertising, publicity and sales will also be handled by the fair sex. Then I'd produce the kind of programs women like—and not the kind of programs MEN think women like!

Life Options In Kate Smith Air Contract

Kate Smith's radio contract, which still has a year and a half to run, has been extended on a noncancellable basis until January 1, 1943.

The new agreement supersedes Miss Smith's present contract which was scheduled to expire January 1, 1942. As did the old, the new contract carries options for life.

A unique clause is contained in the new contract between Miss Smith and her sponsor—General Foods Corporation—providing that the contract can be suspended in case the United States goes to war.

The contract calls for the continuation of both Miss Smith's nighttime variety hour and her daytime comment and news program.

The Kate Smith variety hour presented over WJSV is off the air for the summer, being scheduled to return to the airways in September.

Miss Smith is continuing her 11 a. m. show over the Columbia network for the summer from a special studio in her home on Lake Placid, N. Y.

A staff of four experts will give wide coverage for listeners of WJSV and the Columbia Broadcasting System from the Inter-American Conference which begins this weekend in Havana.

Leading statesmen from most of the American countries are attending the meeting called by Secretary of State Cordell Hull to consider Western Hemisphere problems arising from the European War.

The C. B. S. staff in the Cuban capital will consist of Sterling Fisher, Columbia network director of education and radio talks; Albert Warner, C. B. S.'s Washington correspondent; Alberto Zalamea, of the C. B. S. short wave division, and Howard Pierce Davis, former foreign editor of the "Boston Transcript."

Fisher will produce the "People's Platform" broadcast from Havana Saturday, July 20, supervise a demonstration in Spanish before the conference delegates of C. B. S.'s "School of the Air," and arrange for talks over the Columbia network by several of the prominent statesmen gathered in Havana. The 9:15 to 9:30 p. m. period already has been set aside for these microphone addresses July 24, 25 and 27. Others may be scheduled later.

Guest speakers on Saturday's "People's Platform" at 6:30 will be delegates to the Inter-American Conference. Davis will serve as moderator in the informal discussion on "Is Pan American Unity Possible?"

Warner, who flew directly to Havana from Chicago, where he covered the Democratic Convention for C. B. S. and WJSV, will report daily on happenings at the conference in "The World Today" program at 5:45 p. m. He is also to be available for special broadcasts. Davis, who enjoys a worldwide reputation as an expert on international relations, also will speak on "The World Today" broadcasts.

French Colony Talks No English

Students Learn Language of Paris By Penalizing 'Foreign' Tongues

By Lucia Giddens
The Post Education Editor.

They eat "carottes Vichy," they speak French even on the tennis court and it's all within a few miles of Washington.

A group of Americans have formed a little French colony this summer at the University of Maryland—and while governments fall and rise in France, the events reverberate in conversation in French around a dinner table in College Park, Md.

At the "French house" on the campus 23 persons carry on their daily lives in the language they are studying and teaching. If an English word crops up in a sentence, one student laughingly tries to extract a penalty for another student's lapse.

Usually the "penalty" is some favor, like running an errand to the drugstore for an ice cream cone. "But ask the clerk for it in French," is the parting warning—also in French.

Dr. Falls Director Of the Colony

Dr. William F. Falls, professor at the university, directs the French school which has brought together a faculty whose ancestral roots are in France, but whose present addresses range from New York to California.

Dr. Emile Cailliet, professor of French literature and civilization at Scripps College in California, an outstanding newcomer on the summer faculty, is giving weekly lectures on "Landmarks in the History of French Thought."

Dr. Marcel J. Brun, of Swarthmore College, pastor of the French colony in Philadelphia, is on the faculty to take the place of Andre F. Liotard, former pastor of the Washington French congregation. Liotard went home last summer for a visit and was mobilized.

"The last word we had from him was a radiogram from Turkey a few weeks ago, when he sent a message for the wedding of a former manager of the French house here," Dr. Falls said.

Some of the faculty members have close relatives in the upheaval in France. Letters come, but they are reticent about sharing their contents with anyone else, Dr. Falls said.

Bastille Day, July 14, in previous years has been celebrated at the French house at a special dinner with a toast to France and a dance to finish off the evening. This year, however, there was no observance of the day—except what went on silently in the students' meditations.

Mme. Louise M. Begue, of Brooklyn College and the French Lycee in New York, who manages the house this summer, gives the meals a French flourish.

'Carottes' Have Petain Flavor

Even while relishing "carottes Vichy," one student remarked ruefully that maybe this dish should be banned, because Vichy is the seat of the Petain government. The carrots are cooked with only a little water and seasoned with bacon, butter and a bit of onion.

Another dish which calls forth hearty French exclamation is rice cooked in Provencal style with tomato sauce.

Mme. Begue posts a menu on the dining room door each day, "so we'll know what we're eating," one member of the group remarked trustingly.

The students, ranging from their teens to middle age, include largely high school teachers and college students. From Maryland, Virginia, the District, Delaware, Pennsylvania, North Carolina and Louisiana, they have come to get a taste of France closer home.

After classes they go picknicking, play tennis, ping pong, badminton, croquet and volley ball—all in French. To the group, acquiring a French vocabulary in these sports is an achievement as much to be sought as athletic skill.

The colony uses two buildings on the campus—but the social life of the group centers in the green frame house where they eat their meals, hold meetings and discussions and have an informal party with songs and games each Tuesday evening. There also Dr. Cailliet gives his Thursday evening lectures which are open to the public.

Dinner Dance To Close Term

A special dinner and dance at the end of this month will be a festival finale to the summer course, just before examinations set in. At that time, two bronze medals from the French government will be given to outstanding students Dr. Cailliet arranged for them to be awarded.

In one award the students themselves will single out one of their number who has made the greatest progress in ability to handle the language. For the other the faculty will select the student who has shown outstanding ability in classroom work.

A third prize, a book in French, will be given to the winner of a speaking contest, open to any student of French on the campus.

Other faculty members in the summer French school are Armand Begue, of Brooklyn College; Mme. Cecile de Chauny, teacher of French at the Marjorie Webster School, Washington, and Miss Helen B. Wilcox, instructor in French at the University of Maryland.

A real French colony has grown up right in the middle of the University of Maryland's campus. All told, 23 students carry on their daily lives at the "French House," using the language for all purposes. At top right, Christine Stericker and Dr. William F. Falls, professor in charge, looking over the dining room menu—printed in French. M. Emile Calliet, visiting professor from California (top, left), shows Louise Brooks and Sylvia Nichols how to cut French bread—and he really knows. Even when the students play volley ball (above) they converse in the language of France.

National University Division Accredited

The District Board of Education has recently "accredited National University's Junior College Division of the School of Economics and Government," Chancellor Leslie Garnett pointed out in an announcement of plans.

Among the courses to be offered by the newly accredited school are foreign languages, economics, statistics, mathematics, political science, history and an aviation ground course approved by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, it was announced.

Eugene Carusi, formerly connected with the U. S. District Attorney's office, is dean, and Dr. Josef Gellermann, assistant dean.

Air Education Agency Urged By Studebaker

U. S. Division Would Help Schools to Train Aviation Instructors

Hope that a division of aviation education "may soon be set up" in the United States Office of Education was voiced in a recent statement from Dr. John W. Studebaker, commissioner of education.

"Such a division, requiring only a small but competent staff and costing not to exceed $150,000 a year, might do much through study, experimentation, dissemination of information and professional counsel to stimulate and help the schools to develop more effective programs of instruction in this important field," he said.

It is "painfully evident that schools generally have been slow to capitalize on the interest of youth in this new mode of transportation," Dr. Studebaker said.

"We may not care to imitate the dictatorship nations by peacetime training of our youth for military aviation. Yet if we are to develop air-mindedness in our population, it seems to me that we must stimulate our schools, especially our high schools and colleges, to make aviation a more important part of the curriculum."

Only 2 Schools Train Instructors

After referring to Germany's insistence upon having at least one teacher competent in aviation in each school, Dr. Studebaker said:

"As far as I am presently informed, only two institutions in this country are now offering special training courses to fit teachers to teach aviation in secondary schools."

He said a division of aviation education might be expected to accomplish the following specific objectives:

"1. Establish cooperation between governmental and other technicians in the field of aviation and experienced educators with a view to preparing promising teaching material.

"2. Stimulate cooperation among school administrators, teachers and the industry in a study of how aviation education may be given more adequate attention in the schools.

"3. Study what the outstanding and more progressive schools and colleges are already doing in the field of education, prepare descriptive accounts and disseminate these reports for the guidance of educators generally.

Would Stimulate Teacher-Training

"4 Study practices of teacher training in the field of aviation education; counsel with and stimulate teacher-training institutions to make prospective teachers conscious of the possibilities of aviation education and skillful in giving instruction in this field.

"5. Study and report how the extra-curricular and other activities now playing such a large role in educational programs can contribute to a more adequate program of aviation education; compile and distribute materials helpful in conducting aviation club activities.

"6. Render further assistance to vocational and technical schools and colleges in organizing and carrying on courses.

"7. Gather and disseminate reliable information concerning occupational opportunities and requirements for employment in the field of aviation."

Dr. Studebaker pointed out the scope of the current national defense program in public vocational schools, and also the pilot-training courses for some 11,000 youths in 435 universities and colleges in the last year under the direction of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Teachers Studying At G. W. to Take Trip

Five classes of teachers who are studying at George Washington University this summer will take a field trip to Baltimore Tuesday to make observations at Johns Hopkins University.

There they will visit the Homewood Demonstration School, where a group of "accelerated children" from kindergarten through the sixth grade are taking courses for promotion.

Dr. Ruth E. Coyner, assistant professor of education at George Washington University, and Mrs. Ruth Webb, who is a summer instructor there, are leading the tour. About 60 teachers from various parts of the country are in the group which is taking courses in elementary education and supervision.

Mrs. Moser Heads School Secretaries

Mrs. Gwen Moser, secretary to the president of Wilson Teachers College, was recently elected corresponding secretary of the National Association of School Secretaries. The new president of the association, Mrs. Virginia Halsey, of Montclair, N. J., will come to Washington in August to confer with Mrs. Moser. They were elected at the association's meeting in connection with the National Education Association convention in Milwaukee.

American Planning Group Here Spreads Doctrine of Beauty

A. P. C. A. Promotes Conservation of Both Natural And Ascetic Resources Throughout Nation; Program Includes Beautiful National Capital

This is the eleventh in a series on nature groups in Washington.

By Richard Oulahan 3d.

Improvement of cities, States and the country at large through conservation—that is the aim of the American Planning and Civic Association. This conservation group spreads this doctrine in the hope that, by carrying it out, the people of America will have a well-rounded mode of life as a result.

Specifically, the purposes of the APCA are divided into three categories—national State and local. In the national scene the society takes the following stands:

To make the best use of the heritage of water and land resources for this and for coming generations. A balanced nation-wide program of land and water conservation is sought.

To support a national park system composed of parks and monuments of importance to the country, and to expand the present National Park Service program.

To support a long-range forestry program which will conserve the natural cover of our lands, rehabilitate cut-overs, guard against soil erosion and prevent forest fires.

To favor responsible control and administration of the public domain.

To advocate a comprehensive program for the conservation of American wildlife.

To commend the national system of highways and recommend a system of national parkways protected from commercial encroachments.

To urge the development of a national program for the preservation of our natural landscape.

To support the further planning, development and beautification of Washington in a manner befitting the National Capital for the American people.

In regard to action by the States the APCA advocates the following:

To encourage State planning and the creation of State planning boards which develop coordinated programs of transportation and communication, agriculture and land utilization, conservation and recreation, industries and public improvements.

To advocate planned State park systems, composed of areas of State-wide importance, linked together by scenic highways or parkways.

To recommend the effective control of design for all State buildings, monuments, grounds and public open spaces.

To oppose the disfigurement of the countryside and to advocate State control of roadsides along State highway systems and the employment by State and county highway departments of landscape advisers in the selection of routes, highway widths and design of roadsides.

In combating local problems the Association has similar plans, embracing zoning districts, park systems, streets and highways, proper housing, landscaping and related civic problems.

All in all, this organization is a many-faceted group, extending its influence far beyond the range of the average conservation agency. Although some of its functions are not exactly in the category of nature conservation, the APCA in general deals with our natural resources and primitive lands.

The society came into being in 1904 at a meeting in St. Louis of several enthusiasts of planned conservation. Though the group was known at first as the American Civic Association, it was substantially the same body it is today, and its aims were the same as outlined above. A few years ago the Civic Association merged with the National Conference on City Planning, and the present name was adopted.

From offices in the Union Trust Building, here in Washington, the APCA wages its campaign for planned conservation and keeps an eye on all Congressional action that might aid or deter its program. Each year the association holds, with similar groups, a planning conference, offering an opportunity to study, at first hand, the application of planning principles. National park and roadside improvement conferences are frequently held under the sponsorship of APCA.

Washington and Washingtonians have a particular interest in the association, and the city has benefited by the attention of the group. One of the foremost aims of the planning and civic group is "that Washington should continue to be planned and developed as a Federal city of beauty and convenience, a fitting National Capital for the American people." Toward this end, the association created the Committee of 100 on the Federal City in 1922. At that time, post-war Washington was definitely slipping. It was a large, rapidly growing city, spreading in every direction, plowing under its potential natural beauty with no regard for the future. When the Committee of 100 set to work, it cooperated with other groups—architects, landscapists, engineers and others—to draw up plans for a Greater Washington. In 1924 Congress created the Capital Park Commission and authorized appropriations for the purchase of parks.

The new Commission heard the plans of the Committee of 100 and its associates. Congress listened to them, too. And, in the ensuing 16 years, this city has developed according to plan. The L'Enfant Plan has been the basis of operations, and the city, instead of becoming a hideous, sprawling eyesore, is more beautiful than ever—one of the fairest capitals in the world.

The improvements in Washington show graphically the good work of planned development. The extension of Rock Creek Park, the George Washington Memorial Parkway, the new playgrounds of the city, the preservation of the graceful old trees that line the city's streets—these, in all probability, would not be here today were it not for careful planning. For each of these and other plans the American Planning and Civic Association has fought.

The continued growth of the city is emphasized in the census just taken, with the District of Columbia growing more per capita than any other metropolis in the country. This growth in population makes the continued need for development under supervision apparent. The Capital Park Commission can do this work alone, perhaps, but it can do it far more effectively with the advice and cooperation of other interested groups. And in these other, interested groups, the APCA ranks and will continue to rank with the foremost.

Md. Schools Teach Defense Work to 1,600

Vocational Classes Provide Employes For Arms Expansion

Maryland public schools' participation in the national defense program is already well under way, John J. Seidel, State director of vocational education, reported a few days ago when he came to Washington to confer with officials at the U. S. Office of Education.

About 1,600 workers are enrolled in the vocational classes which Maryland is organizing, with approximately 2,500 expected by the time the program is in full operation, probably within two weeks.

Several schools in Baltimore and also Hagerstown High School are holding classes in three eight-hour shifts, Seidel said.

An airplane factory asked for a course in blueprint reading for 500 men who are engaged in making airplane parts. On short notice, the course was arranged, Seidel said.

This vocational program is built mostly around airplane and shipbuilding trades, he said. "In this program, we are being careful to train no more persons than can be absorbed. Before we add a course, we have reasonable assurance that the men will be employed in that work," Seidel added.

School Board Acts Today on Defense Program Classes

The Board of Education will hold a special meeting at 10:30 a. m. today to act on recommendations of its advisory committee on vocational education, which proposed classes here in nine trades for the national defense program.

If the board approves the plans, classes in machine shop, automotive maintenance and repair, electrical work, sheet metal, woodworking, welding, drafting and blueprint reading, aircraft and painting will start early next week.

The beginning enrollment of several hundred will include men from WPA and other public employment rolls, as well as men employed in industry who want extension courses to whet their skills.

NYA Allocates $147,640 Fund For District

Student Aid Program Assured for 1940-41; 1,658 on Roster Here

With $147,640 just allocated for the coming school year, the National Youth Administration's student work program in the District will be kept up to about the level of the past session, Albert L. Miller, District NYA Administrator, said yesterday.

Latest figures show 746 high school and 912 college students aided by the District program doing part-time work to enable them to continue their education. They assist in school libraries and science laboratories and do a variety of other jobs at the institutions where they are enrolled.

The new allocation was part of a $26,240,281 national total announced by Aubrey Williams, NYA Administrator, for the 1940-41 school year.

In the District all the public high schools and 13 colleges participate in the program, Miller said.

High school students earn between $3 and $6 a month; college undergraduates between $10 and $20; graduate students between $10 and $30.

More than 500,000 students are expected to be employed during 1940-41 in the national program.

Dance Critic Will Lecture to Class At Maryland U.

John Martin, dance critic of the New York Times, will be guest lecturer this week at the summer session of the dance at the University of Maryland—where about 50 students have gone in for a strenuous round of training.

Martin will lecture twice daily at classes, and one evening lecture open to the public is being arranged.

Charles Weidman of New York, well-known dancer, was visiting instructor last week and inspired additional gusto in students already committed to an exacting discipline. "The dance students spend several hours a day in classes, and then come back in the afternoon for practice periods," one of the faculty members remarked.

As a climax July 30, the class will present a demonstration of dancing in the women's field house on the campus, in an evening program open to the public.

Eight men are included in the group, made up largely of physical education instructors, undergraduates and some persons who are making a career of dancing.

Evelyn Davis, Washington dancer, is instructor.

Art Exhibit at World's Fair to Be Rotated

More Stimulating Displays Assured Visitors This Year

By Alice Graeme.

Nearly everyone who went to the World's Fair last summer will remember the handsome building that housed the exhibition of contemporary American art. Architecturally it was one of the most original and successful of the varied types of display halls. It's natural redwood exterior was quite simple in its lines and decorated with interesting designs cut like a stencil from great sheets of metal.

This year instead of showing there the same large group of contemporary American paintings and water colors which were chosen by the quota system from every State, the building has been turned over to the New York City WPA art project and collaborating art organizations. The result is that this summer a far more stimulating display awaits the public than that which was rather hurriedly and not too successfully put together last year.

The WPA has reserved certain sections of the building in which it will rotate various examples of work done by members of the national project, while other sections are devoted to exhibitions by various invited groups. The WPA work is by no means limited to that produced in the New York area, but includes artists from the West Coast, New England, the Middle West—in fact from almost every corner of the country. The main entrance foyer contains a large group of sculpture and a group of finished mural panels together with cartoons for several murals. There are suites of rooms devoted to water colors, to oils, to a part of the Index of American Design, and to a representative group of the many prints done under the project.

To Show Government As Art Sponsor

Writes Audrey McMahon, director of WPA art in New York City: "It will be the purpose and function of the activities and exhibitions housed by this building to demonstrate the role of the Government as a sponsor of the arts, not only through exhibitions of works of art created under Government auspices for public use, but through the encouragement of a wider understanding and appreciation of contemporary art as it exists beyond Government sponsorship."

To further this wider understanding of art, a program of demonstrations of artists at work has been arranged. Actual workshops have been placed in the building in which the public may watch the making of works of art and learn first hand something of the different processes. Regular project artists are carrying on their various assignments in these workshops. There are sculptors working directly from wood and from stone, or modeling figures in clay; mural painters, high on their scaffolding, at work on fresco panels and print makers have their workrooms fully equipped with different stones, plates and presses actually in use.

The public is encouraged to ask questions of the working artists about the different techniques. The Golden Gate Exposition in San Francisco has adopted the same method of bringing art to the people. It has likewise set up different painters and sculptors in studios and workshops that are open and available to the public. Such experiments have proved to have considerable educational value and give a stimulus to the public which is hard to arouse through exhibitions alone.

Tendency to New Techniques Shown

Among the features of the WPA displays it is interesting to note the tendency to develop new techniques and processes. There has been a revival of fine weaving, and such decorative tapestry panels as the several on view, which were designed b Hilaire Hiler, of California, are indicative of this development.

The mosaic panels by some of the members of the New York City project are also interesting. This medium has possibilities and could be used to great advantage in the decoration of modern buildings and of such public places as the subway stations. The WPA is especially to be congratulated on its sponsorship and development of the silk screen process as a fine art medium. It has long been used for commercial purposes but has less frequently been employed by other painters. Among the prints on view at the World's Fair a group which is, incidentally, full of varied and lively material, there are a number of excellent color prints done by the silk screen process. The method is a variation of the stencil principle, and when skillfully handled, creates prints of unusual quality.

"American Art Today" is the name of the building which houses these exhibits, and various American art organizations besides the WPA are to have space here for rotating exhibitions during the summer. Through these constantly changing exhibitions—for the WPA exhibits as well as the visiting shows will be renewed form time to time—the public will have fresh incentive to make frequent trips to the building. At the present time and until Saturday, both the National Academy and the American Water Color Society have units on exhibition. These groups are to be followed next month by exhibitions arranged by the American Artists Congress and by An American Group, Inc.

It will be of especial interest to Washington visitors to see the drawings by Eben F. Comins at the Inter-American House. Mr. Comins is a well-known Washington artist, whose portrait heads of Indians were shown at the Department of Interior earlier this season. At present his studies in crayon of Indians from Mexico, Guatemala, Peru and Bolivia have been placed on view. The exhibition will remain until the close of the Fair.

Mormon Hymns to Be Heard in Organ Recital

In observance of the ninety-third anniversary (July 24) of the entrance of permanent settlers into the valley of Great Salt Lake, D. Sterling Wheelwright, organist of Washington Chapel of Latter-Day Saints, will include a pioneer Mormon hymn in each of his free recitals on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Handel, Wagner and Schubert will constitute tomorrow's program. The highlight in Wednesday's recital is the "Three Mountain Sketches," by the American composer, Joseph Waddell Clokey. Edna C. Wheelwright, soprano, contributes two solos on Friday: Sjoberg's "Visions" and Carnevali's "Spanish Serenade."

Information about hotel accomodations in Stockbridge, Lenox, Great Barrington, Pittsfield and neighboring towns can be obtained from the Berkshire Hills Conference, Courthouse, Pittsfield, Mass.

Toscanini's Recording of Fourth Symphony Satisfying Despite Poor Disc Pauses

By Jay Walz

Arturo Toscanini, famous among other things for his Beethoven festivals, adds the Fourth Symphony to his string of Beethoven recordings in Victor's new album, M-676, four large discs.

It is a notable addition, not because it is the phonograph performance most faithful to the score, but because it brings the score to life. Toscanini has a way of doing this, results of which will not be forgotten in our time, or in time to come, thanks to such recordings as the present one.

Toscanini is particularly irresistible here in the slow parts—the easy going introduction, and the Adagio (second movement). Calm as is the atmosphere in both cases, neither falls dead in the maestro's hands. And in the introduction, for all its quiet, is real suspense. The first, third and fourth movements are quick and rapid-fire. Toscanini does not labor over them, and they come off with welcome spontaneity.

This is to say that Toscanini makes the fourth a contrast to the powerful fifth. Where the latter is explosive, the former is sparkling. Both are dynamic, but what of Beethoven isn't?

Toscanini conducts the B. B. C. Symphony Orchestra for these records. He seems to have found that organization responsive, and in this instance the players sail along with conductor. The recording is mechanically all right, although there are a couple of mean breaks. For some reason the studio men didn't bother to see that the discs end at convenient pauses in the music.

Early in his career, Debussy wrote four pieces, which combined into a "Petite Suite," became popular for their melodies. This feature made them almost unique later, when the French composer became engrossed in the business of veiling his melody, almost to the point of obscurity, in beautiful tonal fabrics.

So the early suite became something more than "petite." Written originally for four hands at the piano, it was transcribed for full orchestra, and in this form it is widely played today. A new Victor recording (Album M-674, two small discs) offers it in a colorful transcription by Busser played by an unnamed symphony orchestra directed by Piero Coppola.

Ernst Wolff, the barytone who knows enough German songs for a lieder anthology, draws from the first chapter of such a volume for his newest record album for Columbia (Set X-168, two small discs). He sings seven German songs out of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. While all seem as fresh as the morning dew, they've been silent on library shelves somewhere for years, waiting the friendly voice of some earnest musician like Wolff.

The unassuming songs are for the most part about pretty maidens, and Wolff sings them like a love-enslaved swain.

First Guest Conductor

Frank Black, general musical director for the National Broadcasting Co., who will conduct the National Symphony Orchestra tonight and Wednesday night at the Potomac Watergate.

Stokowski Band Opens Concerts Here Tuesday

2 D. C. Composers Listed on Program Of Youth Orchestra

Under direction of Leopold Stokowski, the All-American Youth Orchestra will give its inaugural concert Tuesday evening at the Potomac Watergate. Two resident composers, Mary Howe and Deane Shure, will be represented in the program, which includes works by Bach, Brahms and Wagner. At Atlantic City, where the young musicians from various sections of the United States have been rehearsing for the last fortnight, the orchestra will play a dress rehearsal tonight, and it will make a "preview appearance" in Baltimore tomorrow night.

After the Washington concert, the orchestra will give two concerts in Lewisohn Stadium, New York, on Thursday and Friday evenings, and at midnight on Friday the organization will sail on the S. S. As previously stated, 18 members of the Philadelphia Orchestra will serve as section leaders; the other 82 members were selected through auditions held by the Youth Administration. Saul Caston and John Bitter will be assistant conductors.

The program for Tuesday's concert is announced as follows: "Little" Fugue in G minor (Bach), Symphony No. 1 in C minor (Brahms), "Stars" (Mary Howe), "Logan Circle" from "Circles of Washington" (Deane Shure), "Nachtszene and Liebesgesang" from "Tristan and Isolde" (Wagner).

C. C. Tickets, priced from 50 cents to $2.50 plus tax, are on sale at the National Symphony Orchestra box-office in Kitt's Music Store, 1330 G street.

Wesleyan Singers Plan Concert Tonight

Under the direction of Justin Lawrie, the Wesleyan Singers, an organization of 60 voices from 12 Baltimore churches, will give a song service at 8 o'clock tonight in Foundry Methodist Church. Before arriving in Washington they will present a sunset service on the lawn of Grace Methodist Church in Gaithersburg, Md. The group was organized last winter during an evangelistic meeting.

Marcellos to Sing At Pythian Temple

John Marcellos, a vocal artist well known in Europe, will give a recital at 8 o'clock tonight in Pythian Temple, accompanied by Elsa Munk Pedersen, resident pianist. His program includes classic songs, operatic arias and Greek popular songs.

Frank Black Here Tonight With Symphony

N. B. C. Director to Lead Watergate Concert; Shapiro to Be Soloist

Frank Black, general musical director for the National Broadcasting Co., will make his local debut tonight as guest conductor for the National Symphony Orchestra at the Potomac Watergate, and will also conduct Wednesday's concert. Thanks to his prominent position in radio, Mr. Black is known throughout the United States, but it is doubtful if many people are aware of the heavy responsibilities which rest upon his shoulders. Radio listeners generally think of him only as conductor of the weekly broadcasts of the N. B. C. String Orchestra.

As general director he must go through all manuscripts submitted for performance, hold auditions for all musicians who seek appearances, supervise the purchase and maintenance of all instruments owned by the company, arrange and rehearse all programs, make transcriptions and orchestrations, and compose music of his own. At his desk in Radio City at 9 o'clock in the morning, he is lucky if he gets away by 9 at night. He also travels extensively to conduct in Boston, Cleveland, Hollywood and other cities. Many of the transcriptions he has made for the string orchestra were done while commuting by plane.

Appearing as soloist on tonight's program is Harvey Shapiro, who was last winter a violoncellist in the N. B. C. Orchestra under Arturo Toscanini, and this summer has been playing with the orchestra conducted by Edwin McArthur at the New York World's Fair. McArthur recently wrote to C. C. Cappel: "Unless I miss my guess, Shapiro will make a big hit, and you are to be congratulated on having such a talented American soloist."

Tonight's program consists of the overture to Johann Strauss' operetta, "Die Fledermaus," Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony in A major, the prelude to "Die Meistersinger," the overture to Smetana's "The Bartered Bride," Saint-Saens' violoncello concerto in A minor and Liszt's tone-poem, "Les Preludes."

Wednesday's soloist is Philip Frank, American violinist, who is a member of the N. B. C. Orchestra under Toscanini and will return from the South American tour of that organization just in time for his appearance here. He will be heard in Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole." The remainder of the program is announced as follows:

Overture to "Le Nozze di Figaro" (Mozart), Symphony in E minor, "From the New World" (Dvorak), "On the Beautiful Blue Danube" (Strauss), "My Country" (Mortimer Wilson).

Tickets for tonight's concert, prices from 25 cents to $1, will be on sale after 11 o'clock this morning at the Watergate.

Pianist and 'Cellist In C. U. Recital

Two resident musicians, Minna Niemann, pianist, and Howard Mitchell, violoncellist, will be presented by the summer session of Catholic University in a joint recital tomorrow at 7:30 p. m., in McMahon Hall. Miss Niemann's numbers will be Chorale - Prelude, "Sanctify Us by Thy Goodness" (Bach), Sonata in C major (Scarlatti); Intermezzo in A minor and B flat minor, Op. 118 (Brahms); Paganini Caprice No. 9, "La Chasse (Liszt); "Garden Music" (Walter Niemann); Arabesque in E major (Debussy); Nocturne in E minor, Prelude in F major and B major (Chopin).

Mr. Mitchell will be heard in the following selections: Grave and Allegro (Eccles), Andante (Mozart), Entr'acte (Schubert), Allegro (Bach), "Malaguena" (Albeniz), "Elegie" and "Berceuse (Faure), "Serenade Napolitaine" (Sgambati), "At the Fountain" (Davidov).

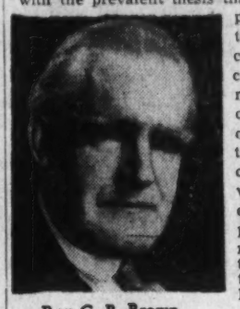
American Music Part Of Unbroken Line

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Those who agree with the statement by Olin Downes in the New York Times last Sunday that "Europe is at the end of a great arch of musical evolution which has spanned centuries" will also be in accord with the prevalent thesis that Europe's predicament is America's opportunity. We have all been aware for the last few decades that the level of serious composition has been steadily rising in our country and that we are accumulating a musical literature which will come in due course of time to be known as the product of an "American school." We also realize that the temporary cessation of musical creation in Europe because of preoccupation with national rivalries in a struggle for economic dominance offers American composers a comparatively free field. This realization has led to considerable speculation as to what our composers will do with their freedom, and some of the thinking has shot wide of the mark.



Ray C. B. Brown.

It is not true that the "great arch of musical evolution" has completed its span, for the the base of the arch has merely been transfered to America, and the process of evolution is still going on. We Americans are a composite of European stocks, and we can no more discard our musical heritage than we can stop using English today and begin speaking tomorrow a new language created over night. Musical evolution has nothing to do with arches or other structural devices, but is as continuous a process as organic evolution, and the only thing that will stop its growth is the cessation of mankind's intellectual activity.

For purposes of historical convenience we may well divide the music of the past into epochs, each characterized by certain phases of development, but we must not forget the unbroken continuity of growth. On this point Bernard van Dieren has spoken wisely: "A composer represents a period only in so far as he resembles the preceding composer who influenced the initial phases of his thought. Many a musician is perpetually struck by the differences between familiar recent works and the apparent sameness of much old music. If that all seems alike to him, it must be, he reasons, that the old works stand for their age. Their individualities disappear before the contrast they collectively present with the idiom of his own day.

"People speak of Wagner and Meyerbeer as opposite poles, but will lump together the work of 20 highly individual masters as 'sixteenth-century music.' Possibly, in another hundred years Wagner and Meyerbeer will be similarly hyphenated as composers of 'nineteenth-century music.' Later historians may in turn find it hard to explain what precisely was the unfathomable cleft between the two, and why it should have been so passionately discussed."

In our estimates of the music of the past and in our dreams about the music of the future, we must always view the whole course of music in true perspective. That course has from the beginning disregarded all geographical and political boundaries, for music is the product of many minds at work in many countries. That is what we mean when we say that music is a universal language. It is an Esperanto that has developed from the contributions of different nations and it is understood by the peoples of all nations who have contributed to it.

It is not incumbent upon the American composer to assert his independence from all European influences, for he cannot do that and at the same time write intelligible music. It is incumbent upon him to respect the harmonic laws which are the grammar of music and to write naturally and sincerely what he has to say. Out of such natural and sincere expression has already come much excellent American music—American in the sense that it was composed in this country and that it expresses new points of view, but not in the sense that it is completely detached from the evolutionary process.

Swing Sessions

with BILL GOTTLIEB

If you haven't yet forgotten your kicks from Milt Herth and his trio, make a point of catching him at the Neptune Room before they pack up for their next engagement.

Milt is the man who did the impossible. He made the organ digestible to swing fans—a trick at which Fats Waller himself was unsuccessful. As you may have heard Milt relate, he's in the doghouse with the Hammond people, manufacturers of the electric organ, even though he really put their product on the map. It seems that the electric organ was intended for churches who couldn't afford big pipe jobs. Mr. Hammond tried to buy back Milt's machine when the first loud "ah-men" tuned out to be a loud and hot offbeat.

The trio's latest recording—"Goofus" backed up by "Bummel Petrus"—isn't particularly exciting, but hear their recent sides of "Boogie Woogie" and "Slow Freight" if you want an idea of what the trio can do. And make a note of some forthcoming platters, one with a Teddy Grace vocal, another with a Teddy Bunn guitar.

Righteous swing: Muggsy Spanier, who has since tossed in the towel and joined Bob Crosby, takes a parting shot with his own band on "Lonesome Road" and "Mandy, Make Up Your Mind." A great jazz orchestra, and great sides—too great for the band's own good . . . The current fad dictates that no swing band has arrived until it's taken two sides of a 10-inch record for a hot tune. Woody Herman shoots his 20 inches on "Get Your Boots Laced Papa" and Will Bradley does it on "Beat Me Daddy (Eight to the Bar)." The Bradley opus, dedicated to the almost mythical pianist, Peck Kelly, deserves the extra space, and Herman's screwy item fills both sides adequately, too . . . Biggest musical surprise of the week are Louis Armstrong's improved backing on "Cut Off My Legs and Call Me Shorty" (plus fine Louis trumpet and vocals) and a mysterious band called Erskine Butterfield's Blue Boys who propel some surprisingly sound barrelhouse. Best of the four latest Butterfield sides are "Your Feets Too Big" and "Down Home Blues" . . . More dynamic swing by young composer-leader Teddy Powell on "Teddy Bear Boogie" and "Feather Merchant's Ball."

Popular swing and sweet: Gray Gordon keeps our new-found national self-consciousness a-spinning on records with "I Am an American." But the vocalists are better suited, I'm afraid, to the reverse, "Gentlemen of the Jury" . . . Kay Kyser displays a usually suppressed sprightliness on "Tennessee Fish Fry" . . . Even with former Goodmanite Martha Tilton at the lyrics, Artie Shaw's new music still fails to approach preabdication days on "Dreaming Out Loud" and "Now We Know." The 33 pieces, incidentally, are now down to 22, with some strings retained and most of his original band recalled . . . Dick Stabile's competent but neglected alto saxophone has finally gotten on records. He debuts with his band on "Prairie Mary" and "I'll Pray For Your," with a follow up on "I Hear Bluebirds" and "Six Lessons From Madame La-Zonga" . . . "I Can't Resist You," one of the more promising recent ballads, is handled this week by Dick Jergens and Jimmy Dorsey . . . Jeanette MacDonald has recorded two tunes from her movie "New Moon;" "Lover Come Back to Me" and "One Kiss" . . . Dorothy Lamour has finally made a record that suits her voice—"I Gotta Right to Sing the Blues" . . . "The End of the Rainbow" gets an unusual presentation when Woody Herman handles it on one side of a record and Judy Garland on the other. Judy gets the palm.

PHONOGRAPH-RADIO DEPARTMENT—Second Floor

Service Sidelights

By John G. Norris

Congress settles down this week to decide what to do about compulsory military training, the one controversial phase of the huge defense program. Members voted billions for new planes, tanks and additional volunteer soldiers amid virtual unanimous applause from back home. It came easy, like pouring out PWA money a few years back for new postoffices or levees. Even the tax bill was accepted without protest as necessary to pay for the essential arms.

NORRIS

Here, however, is a horse of a different color. It is war preparedness without sugar coating, bringing home to every American what a warring world means. Not new arms factories that bring jobs and money to the community, or a nickle more on a bottle of whisky, but the prospect of a year and a half in the Army staring every ablebodied male citizen in the face.

During the rather exhaustive hearings held by the Senate Military Affairs Committee, the witnesses pro and con on conscription were rather evenly divided. The pending Burke-Wadsworth bill was urged as essential to the defense of America and assailed "Hitlerism." Despite this numerical split of testimony, it seems certain the committee will give speedy approval to the measure and that Congress will enact legislation along this line before the end of the summer.

Passage of Bill Almost Assured

The bill is not a part of President Roosevelt's legislative program, but it has been endorsed (with suggested minor changes) by the War and Navy Departments. Opponents, for the most part, have been the usual student and peace groups which have appeared to protest against most of the arms increases of recent years.

"It isn't a question of what we want to do," one Senator declared, "it's what we have to do. Machines are no good without the men to run them and we can't get enough men without conscription."

There will be a fight over voting the bill in committee and on the floor of the Senate and House, but practically everyone on Capitol Hill predicts its passage.

What will the conscription act be like? How will it affect us? This is what the committees must decide this week. They virtually have decided to approve some form of compulsory military service. Probably the pending measure, modified slightly, will be recommended. It requires all males between 18 and 65 to register, subjects those 21 to 45 to Army service and makes the rest liable for home defense service.

The Army plans to call about 300,000 men in October, 15,000 in November, perhaps 10,000 in December and 5,000 a month until April, when 400,000 would be called. Relatively few would then be drafted until the following October when 600,000 would be called. The War Department wants a training period of from 15 to 18 months as compared with the 8 months set in the Burke-Wadsworth bill, and Congress probably will give them the longer period.

Public Demand Bill, Politicians Say

The bill is called a selective service measure and that's what it would be. Men with dependents and those employed in key posts in essential industries would be exempted. Local boards of leading older citizens would pass on exemptions.

For the most part the men called would be between 21 and 31, but not entirely. Sponsors of the legislation believe that older men should be required to do their part where they can and the Army backs them up. While few men above 30 would be accepted for combat service, the Army high command says there are many posts at headquarters and elsewhere which the older men could fill better than the youngsters.

Yes, say those who have been following the conscription bill in its first congressional innings, the Nation had better get ready for compulsory military service for it's coming. Some Senators who have been listening to the testimony and reading their mail from back home, however, put it differently. They say Congress had better get ready to vote compulsory service, for the Nation is way ahead of them and is getting impatient at waiting so long for them to vote this essential preparedness step.

But whether America is steeling itself to accept an unpleasant dose, or impatiently waiting for Congress to act, conscription is here. That's what the politically wise firmly believe.

Unlike automobiles and trucks, airplanes cannot be produced by machine mass production methods. They're essentially hand-constructed as the above photographs snapped at California's Douglas Aircraft Co. plainly show. Reason planes are handmade is the aluminum alloy used in construction. The alloy must be worked by hand and as many as 300,000 rivets sometimes are driven into one plane—by hand. Experts estimate 600,000 men would be needed to fashion 50,000 planes a year—an increase in present factory personnel of some 400,000 workmen.

U. S. May Need 600,000 Men To Build 50,000 Planes

Industry Still in the Handmade Stage; Each Operation Is Like a Job of Custom-Tailoring and Can't Be Hurried

By Devon Francis

Associated Press Aviation Editor

Santa Monica, Calif., July 20.—After 37 years, the airplane still is a handmade production.

One statistician has figured that it will require the work of close to 600,000 persons to turn out the 50,000 planes a year President Roosevelt has asked. That many persons in the automotive industry can turn out trucks and passenger cars by the millions.

Fifty thousand airplanes will mean the addition of at least 400,000 men to the shop personnel of the aircraft factories. It will mean the addition of other tens of thousands to the pay rolls of related industries which supply machine tools and materials.

Airplanes remain a handmade product, expensive and slow in manufacture, largely because of the metal which goes into them.

That metal is aluminum alloy. Pound for pound, it is the best construction metal for planes which engineers have found since the Wright brothers first flew in 1903.

Against stainless steel aluminum is not only much less expensive but it is also stronger. Stainless steel wings, with which this industry has experimented, must be reinforced inside with a corrugated "backing" to make them take the abuse to which aluminum is subjected.

A piece of aluminum interior wing structure in almost constant flight for six years was removed the other day from an airliner and purposely was bent until it broke. It showed practically the same strength as the day it had been installed in the plane.

Here at the plant of the Douglas Aircraft Co., one of the largest in the United States, 18,000 persons are fabricating both warplanes and commercial transports with that slow, meticulous workmanship which is typical of the industry.

Night and day, three shifts around the clock, men fashion winged monsters which tomorrow, in some instances, will be flying, destruction-bent, in Europe. Under 17 acres of roof, riveting hammers, in concert, sound like a clapboard house being torn apart bodily.

Almost every rivet in these planes—some types contain as many as 300,000—must be inserted individually and tapped down with air-driven hammers. Two men are assigned to each hammer. Some spot welding is being done, but none of it, as yet, is tried on parts built to withstand such stresses as are set up in the "pull-outs" of dive-bombing.

The punishment meted out to planes in such maneuvers is indicated by the fact that dive-bombing pilots "black out"—lose consciousness—when they level off at the conclusion of their dives. The blackout, of course, is momentary, but the strain that causes it is capable of pulling the wings off the plane.

Actual construction is only part of the tedious process of plane manufacture. Usually 20 months are required from the conception of an idea for a new plane and the actual production of the test plane. Then additional weeks are required for testing.

Airplanes develop strange quirks, sudden ailments, and the whole design must be returned to the engineers for study.

At one Southern California plant is was discovered after 40 planes of a given type had rolled off the assembly line that all of them were "heavy" on the right wing. They maneuvered badly. The engineers investigating discovered a rivet hole guide in a "jig," a steel framework in which airplanes are built, was a quarter-inch out of line. The mistake required the reconstruction of 40 wing panels.

Another quirk which afflicts airplanes in a shaft in the center of gravity. At the Douglas plant's big final assembly hangar three scales, graded to the fineness of an apothecary's, are sunk into the concrete flooring.

Every plane leaving the factory is weighed, landing gear to tail wheel, to determine its net tonnage and weight distribution.

Weight distribution is so important that small-plane owners constantly are warned by insurance companies to clean the accumulated dust from the rear of their fuselages. A few extra pounds there will cause a fatal spin.

Both a business and an art, airplane manufacture has developed its own specialists. In the Los Angeles area, where the 36,000 shop employes probably will be doubled before the close of the year, men who work on the big shells which become transport cabins or the interiors of bombers are known as framers, skinners and riveters.

The framers put the skeletons together. The skinners apply the broad metal lath which covers the skeleton and attach it temporarily with spring inserts in the rivet holes, and the riveters complete the job.

A new technique in riveting has been developed in the last couple of years. "Flush rivets," shaped like flat-headed screws, are tapped into place on the leading edges and part of the top wing to accelerate the flow of air. That increases the lift and the speed.

A housewife couldn't be any more careful with a cake ready for the oven.

Plans Set For K. of C. Boat Frolic

Plans have been completed for the ninth annual Knights of Columbus showboat cruise tomorrow evening, leaving Seventh street wharf at 8:30 o'clock. The Wilson Line "Mount Vernon" has been chartered by the Knights of Columbus for their moonlight outing, which each year attracts several thousand Knights and their families and friends. This year a special invitation has been extended non-Catholics and non-members of the Order.

Present plans include dancing from the time the boat leaves the wharf. Refreshments and games will be featured, and a floor show has been engaged.

The reception committee will be headed by State Deputy Alfred A. McGarraghy, Past State Deputy and Mrs. Thomas F. Carlin, District Deputies Francis J. Malloy and Thomas J. Myers, Grand Knights Joseph M. McKenna, James F. Kehoe, James Fox, Robert F. Sheridan and Lawrence A. Gage.

Francis J. Rafterry is general chairman of the showboat. He is being assisted by the following committee: Harold N. Whalen, secretary; Manning J. Willcoxon, treasurer; F. J. Malloy, chairman, ticket committee; Francis A. McCann, press and publicity; Andrew L. Dignan, refreshments; Andrew L. Oehmann, entertainment; James M. Butler, games; Theodore F. Moseley, dance; John Farrell, posters; Eugene Nichols, badges; Joseph B. McCann, decorations, and Past State Deputy Walter I. Piant, cashier at wharf.

Many organizations have been invited to take part in this year's moonlight cruise. Among them are the Catholic Daughters of America, International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, Holy Name Societies of the 33 local parishes, Sodality Union of Washington, the Curley Club of Washington, and many others.

State Deputy Alfred A. McGarraghy has announced that at a recent meeting of the State officers the Rev. Aloysius E. Fuller, S. The post unanimously passed resolutions asking National Commander George M. McNulty to be a candidate to succeed himself.

Army & Navy Union

A "streamlined" administration was selected to serve for the coming 12 months at the annual election of officers of Special Troops Garrison, No. 1001, Army and Navy Union, U. S. A., last Monday.

In order to promote a high degree of efficiency and cooperation among the officers it was moved to concentrate the duties of the several regular officers into a "high-powered" three-man group, to function indefinitely.

Those elected were: Commander, Capt. Henry B. Cockrell; senior vice commander, Capt. Edward D. Mulvanity, and junior vice commander, Sergt. Frank S. Tenny.

Meetings of the garrison will be held at the National Guard Armory on the third Monday of every month at 8 p. m.

Regular Veterans Association

Walter P. Boehm, commander of Gen. Malin Craig Post, R. V. A., last week announced a contest for the largest number of recruits, with a silver cup as prize.

A. A. Linnenbrogger was elected junior vice commander.

Ben Hur

The delegates to the District and Maryland State Congress will meet in this city the middle of September. The degree team from Baltimore will conduct the initiation ceremnoies upon a class of candidates. Prominent members of the order from Hagerstown will be present.

The chairman of the executive board, Melvin D. Newland, presided at the meeting, which was attended by 15 delegates from the seven councils. District Manager Kenneth L. Canine spoke on the successful campaign for new members, which will close on September 1. A. E. Myers, field representative, has been assigned to McKinley Court, No. 992, and two women representatives have been appointed to the ladies court, Washington, No. 1.

Calvin S. Orth, chief deputy, spoke at the meeting of Victory Court, No. 519, on the work being accomplished by the other court deputies, and a large number of candidates will be listed for the initistory work by the visiting degree team.

Richard A. Walker, acting president of the Hospital Service Association, presided at the meeting and Clarence A. Mitchell, secretary, spoke on the number of claims received and the financial condition of the association. This auxiliary is a local affair and contributions are made by the courts and members.

Mrs. Karns Heads Fleet Auxiliary

Mrs. Bertha Karns was elected president of Unit 4 of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Fleet Reserve Association for the coming year at the regular meeting last week. Other officers elected are: Mrs. Mary Bennington, vice president; Mrs. Georgina Halstead, treasurer; Mrs. Christine Fleming, secretary, and Mrs. Ethel Sanders, chaplain.

Those elected to the board of directors for the coming year are: Ethel Steele, Eleanor Cronan, Una Lofgren and Ruth Crenshaw. The new officers will be installed at the August meeting of the unit.

Local Naval Reserve Changes Training Problem

Lieut. W. Croft Jennings, commanding officer of the local battalion of the Naval Reserve, has announced a change in the training program of the group for the week-by-Tuesday night drills.

Effective throughout July, the new program will call for less emphasis upon battle problems and more upon the ever-present practical details of life at sea. During the past month the weekly drills have been arranged so as to give each of the three divisions a battle problem every drill night in order to give the division commanding officers experience in meeting new tactical situations and the other officers and men experience in the teamwork required to operate a naval vessel as a battle unit.

Under the new shedule more time will be available for training in the manual of arms, the emergency drills, such as fire and collision; lifeboat handling; first aid, and instruction in naval customs and the many and varied subjects, a knowledge of which is important to a modern man-of-war's man. Additional time will also be available for advance training of men in the specialists branches.

Whether this training program will be continued through August, or whether the battalion will resume the emphasis on battle problems as the cruise date approaches remains undecided.

Make Parade a Warning to Traitors, Legion Urges

Slattery Seeks Strong Turnout For Convention

Department Commander William Slattery last week issued the following message to members of the American Legion of the District of Columbia:

"Unless the ritual of our organization is to be meaningless, we should make public proof of our love of country by marching in the parade of the department as an answer to Fifth Column sabotage of citizenship. Fall in behind your own post colors and let the enemies of our Nation witness our strength."

Final meeting of the general committe arranging the department convention for August 1-3, 1940, will be held at department headquarters at 8 p. m. tomorrow night. Convention programs and badges may now be secured from Mrs. Fraser at department headquarters.

Preconvention meetings have been set for Monday, July 29, at the Mayflower Hotel. Marshals to assist the parade chairman, William Leo Collins, are: Gerald J. Lawler, John R. Weitzel, William P. Kershner, Edwin L. Donaldson, Ernest F. Dwyer and Roy S. Musick.

Department Americanism Chairman Zeb Hamilton announced that the annual American Legion citizenship awards for 1940 will be given to Miss Maude Alton, principal of the Americanization School; Stephen P. Porter, chief engineer of the District Fire Department; Gordon Hittenmark, of the National Broadcasting Co.; Newbold Noyes, sr., of the Washington Evening Star, and Representative Martin Dies.

These citizenship awards are given annually to persons not eligible to membership in the American Legion, but who by their private lives exemplify the traits so necessary to further the American principles of citizenship. These presentations will be made at the opening session of the department convention at the Mayflower Hotel on August 1.

A total of 36 new members were admitted to membership in the post, bringing the post membership up to a total of 602 and making it the largest post in this city for the seventh consecutive year.

Athletic Officer Daniel M. Goodacre announces the post team will play the last regularly scheduled game against the National Cathedral nine on the Elipse today at 1 p. m., on the north diamond. The regularly scheduled season ends with next Sunday's games but Sergt. Jasper has drawn a bye for that day. Citizenship Award Winners Announced By Zeb Hamilton

Week-End Vagabond

By Rae Lewis

JUST dangle a battlefield any time you want a sure lure for baiting a man with a vagabondage. You can select any direction, decide where you want to go, and name a battlefield not far away.

For instance, you want to see the teeming docks of Baltimore harbor, with the big ships from foreign ports and the small craft laden with melons, potatoes or seafood from the Eastern Shore. So, all you do is point out the charms of Fort McHenry, site of the battle in 1814 which Francis Scott Key memorialized. In a superb setting and administered by the National Park Service, the star-shaped fort attracts everyone and "since we're here, why not see the wharves."

It matters not which direction you prefer. Westward is the area where were fought the battles of Manassas during the Civil War. Northwestward in Pennsylvania, if you're in the humor for a longer trip, is Fort Necessity, site of an engagement during the French and Indian War.

For an extensive battlefields tour, take Petersburg, for that is said to be the largest single battlefield area in America. A hundred miles of well-preserved earthworks remain as evidence of the ten months of fighting around Petersburg in the Civil War and the longest siege in the history of the United States. Petersburg, however, has been renowned for its part in our history ever since it was a frontier fort in 1645. It was the scene of Revolutionary War fighting and gained its name of "The Cockade City" during the War of 1812.

Yorktown occupies a similar position, with the emphasis placed on its Revolutionary War history and the surrender of Cornwallis. But its story began in the period of the earliest English settlements and there are not only battlefields, but historic buildings in the little town to recall its former busy days. Now a part of the Colonial National Historical Park, including Williamsburg and the parkway connecting them, as well as Jamestown, Yorktown is beautifully situated on a fine harbor. That accounts for its early commercial activity, but the colonial movement westward and exhaustion of the soil caused its decline. But because of the fine restoration work there done by the National Park Service, it is now a mecca for visitors. Don't miss seeing the articles recently recovered from the British battleships sunk off Yorktown.

I think I cut my teeth on the "Battle of the Wilderness" ably described by my grandfather, but later I began to wonder if it were such a wilderness after all. It took just one visit to the battlefields area around Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Spotsylvania County to convince me that it must have been fierce. Starting at the National Park Service museum in Fredericksburg, you can make an extensive tour of restored areas so marked that you can follow the progress of the various battles as you drive along.

Richmond National Battlefield Park is, of course, important to all students of the Civil War, for it was the goal of the Federal forces—until Grant came. Fort Hoke's restoration enables you to see a fort exactly as it existed when it was the center of fighting. There are massive earthworks among the ravines and hills and woods, with good roads throughout.

Antietam National Battlefield site in Maryland (reached through Frederick and Route 40 from there) marks the scene of the battle which ended Gen. Lee's first invasion of the North. There were greater losses there on September 17, 1862, than on any other single day during the war and yet neither side gained a decisive victory.

Gettysburg in Pennsylvania was the scene of the three-day battle which ended Gen. Lee's invasion of the North and it is now a National Military Park. Encompassing some 2,530 acres, this area has 35 miles of paved roads. It is profusely marked with more than 2,000 monuments and markers. Reach it by via Frederick and Route 15 from there, and return via Hagerstown for variety's sake.

We are fortunate here in being easily accessible to many noteworthy historical spots, but if you are able to venture farther afield, there are a large number in other parts of the country. Many of them are administered by the National Park Service, which means that you can count on seeing authentically restored areas, well identified and adequately marked.

25,000 to Visit St. Petersburg

St. Petersburg, Fla.

An increase of 55 per cent over last year in this resort's summer tourist business is the result of an intelligent newspaper advertising campaign directed at the most difficult target of all—the preconceived ideas of large masses of people.

Go South to cool off? The thought seemed fantastic to the average summer vacationist, in spite of the evidence, in the form of Government weather charts, showing St. Petersburg's maximum temperatures many degrees below those of Northern States between May and October.

But persistent advertising, plus the testimony of satisfied customers, who found Gulf breezes refreshingly cool and free from depressing humidity, are making a telling dent in the summer travel habits of the American public. This summer St. Petersburg will entertain 25,000 visitors, the great majority of whom have shrunk from the idea of a summer in the South only a few years ago.

Tourists Flocking To North Carolina

Raleigh, N. C.

This year may prove North Carolina's banner tourist year. Such is the indication of two recent reports. The National Park Service records show that the 128,533 visitors to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in June represented an increase of 40 per cent above the visitors in June, 1939. That the increase in interest in Tar Heel resorts is not limited to the mountains, alone, is indicated by the report that so far this year there has been a 60 per cent increase in the number of inquiries and requests for literature received by the Governor's Hospitality Committee here in Raleigh.

The newly opened Washington office will include Baltimore in covering and servicing agents.

Mexico Decides To Spend $50,000

The Mexican government has appropriated $50,000 to be spent in promoting travel. Fiscal and private enterprise have already accomplished much in Mexico to offer a pleasant and instructive vacation to American tourists. The country today possesses a network of modern railroads and well-paved highways so that the visitor can travel to remote areas swiftly and comfortably. First-class hotels are now plentiful, while the food and service meet the approval of the most fastidious travelers. The government appropriation will be put to work without delay. Pamphlets and booklets outlining the country's major scenic attractions are already on the press.

Troubadour Trips Latest Travel Wrinkle

"Merrily We Roll Along" will vie with "Home on the Range" in the popularity contest for a highway song which the American Express is now staging while their "Banner Tours" roll merrily along in air-conditioned trains across 12 States and Canada in 6,000-mile vacation trips this summer.

These Banner Tours—or Troubadour Trips, as some people call them—are the latest wrinkle in vacation travel. Each Vacation Special will carry, in addition to the "cruise director," who is in charge, a hostess and a trained nurse for the ladies, a barber and a traveling unit of entertainers.

These entertainers are young men who play and sing and who organize and direct informal entertainment. It is their job, as "wandering minstrel boys," to stroll up and down the train and keep the folks happy. When they start a song everybody is supposed to join in and, as the cruise director says, "if you can't sing you can whistle."

Canada Attracts U. S. Visitors

The announcement of Prime Minister Mackenzie King to the effect American citizens will not be affected by any Canadian government passport regulations if they wish to visit Canada is hailed as "welcome news" by A. P. Lait, district passenger agent of the Canadian National Railways, in Washington, D. C.

"There are no restrictions at the Canadian border for United States citizens who desire to visit the Dominion for business or on a vacation," Mr. Lait said and "officials will gladly facilitate the passage of Americans across a boundary line, which is marked by the greatest degree of freedom in all the world."

"That Americans appreciate freedom and good neighborliness of Canada is to be seen in the large number of travel inquiries, as well as demand for reservations at all leading Canadian resorts, including Jasper Park Lodge in the Rockies, Minaki in the Lake-of-the-Woods district and Pictou Lodge in Nova Scotia, which are now open for the season," Mr. Lait said, adding that steamship tours out of Vancouver to Alaska through the sheltered inside pasage "are now still as attractive as ever."

Fish Biting at Niantic, Conn.

Niantic, Conn.

Salt water fishing enthusiasts are flocking to the Connecticut shore for the greatest run of broadbill swordfish in years. Fishermen from Connecticut were taking the big fish on rod and reel from the waters between Montauk Point and Block Island.

Nearer the Connecticut shore, bonits, porgies and striped bass are being taken in abundance. Although cold weather has held the tuna fish in southern waters, the recent rise in temperature portends an early run of these scrappy fish.

Owners of sport fishing boats report that the current season is the best on record and hundreds of boats set forth for the fishing grounds every day.

Lake George, N. Y.

While the Administration deals with National preparedness, leaders in this resort are going in for greater physical preparedness for individuals by providing more outdoor recreation for visitors. Accordingly, the Chamber of Commerce has announced its intent to promote various tournaments.

This week will see a brief tennis tourney on the village courts at the school campus, two-and-foursome golf competitions on the Queen Village course, at Warrensburg, and swimming and shuffleboard contest.

Tour by Bus to 14 Famous National Parks Can Be Arranged Through Local Agency

For the first time since a united effort was made to call public attention to our National parks, a grand tour, arranged on an expense-paid basis, has been set up for the benefit of travelers this summer. It calls for stopovers and visits to 14 of the outstanding parks in the United States.

Realizing that tremendous public interest has been aroused in our National parks, Miss Irma Cassasa, manager of Highway Tours with offices in the Greyhound Terminal, has just completed a set-up whereby Washington travelers who have a month at their command can visit 14 of the parks, and those who have two weeks' vacation can visit from three to five parks.

In a National park tour of the East, Miss Cassasa has arranged for a trip that will take the traveler through the Rocky Mountain National Park, the Shenandoah National Park, then traveling through much of the scenic portion of the East the traveler will visit beautiful Acadia National Park in Maine.

This tour of the National parks in the East provides a great deal more to the pleasure of the traveler than just a visit to the parks. For instance in reaching the Great Smokies National Park the route followed leads through the heart of the colonial Virginia and in riding through the Shenandoah National Park the visitor is in the center of the area where the famous caves of Virginia are found. Traveling to Maine, the route passes through the heart of historic New England, with a day stop-over provided for in Boston so that a close-up can be had of this city and near by points of interest.

In outlining the tour which calls for visits to 14 national parks, Miss Cassasa has included stopovers not only at all the better known places such as the Yellowstone, Mount Rainier, Yosemite, Grand Canyon and Rocky Mountain National parks, but she has also arranged for the traveler to visit lesser known parks such as Glacier, Crater Lake, Lassen, Gen. Grant, Sequoia and the Petrified Forest National parks.

A visit to Carlsbad Caverns is optional, but if the latter is visited, then Rocky Mountain National Park is out of the picture.

Thirty full days are needed to complete this latter tour with stopovers every night in a first class hotel where room has been reserved in the passenger's name, in advance by Miss Cassasa.

A detailed itinerary is made out for the traveler's benefit before the trip is started. This gives all pertinent information as to where hotel rooms have been reserved, time of arrival and departure from each city, a full list of the things to see en route.

While any of the 150 or more tours being offered by Miss Cassasa's office this year can be started any day and at practically any time, sufficient notice, in most instances three days, is required so that the advance reservations for hotel rooms can be made.

VISIT Les Cantons de l'Est, Old Québec's Eastern Townships, where the Green Mountains jut North across the border into the land where no neighbour needs a passport, not even in war days. Here is a country to remind you of England's beautiful, douce Lake district — Bolton Pass, through which the old stage road from New England ran, Massawippi, Memphrémagog, Brome, gentle lakes lying in the shadow of verdant hills. Rogers' Rangers passed this way!

Today this charming countryside and its thriving capital city, Sherbrooke, are populated by Canadians of the two race strains, French and English, two peoples living side by side in harmony and contentment. They offer the touring guest every amenity to be found at home—plus that indefinable something which, for want of an apt descriptive, we call "atmosphere".

As of these gentle Eastern Townships, so of all Québec, this country just across the street from home where your dollar goes farther. Getting to know these neighbours is worth a space of anyone's time. Why not come this summer?

Youth Orchestra to Make Debut in Atlantic City

Atlantic City.

When Leopold Stokowski waves his baton here tomorrow night the strings and brass of the All-American Youth Orchestra will blend in the music of its first concert.

The concert, which will be held in the ballroom of the municipal Convention Hall, will provide an opportunity for thousands of music lovers to hear for the first time this orchestra of young musicians, which has created Nation-wide interest. The group of 100 players, recruited from all the States in the Union, will leave on July 26 on the S. S. Uruguay with their distinguished conductor for a good-will tour thorugh Latin America. They have been rehearsing here during the last two weeks.

The resort gave an enthusiastic welcome to the mammoth ice spectacle, Ice-Capades of 1940, which had its world premiere here last night and will continue showing in the main auditorium of the Convention Hall until September 1.

Sixty performers, the cream of the skating crop from both sides of the Atlantic, made their debut before an appreciative audience that called them back time and again for encores.

Vera Hruba, the Czecho-Slovakia glamour girl of the ice, captivated the audience with her scintillating execution of her routine. Pierre Benoit, youthful Canadian Gaucho skater, proved one of the hits of the show with his unusual performance. Comedy on skates, ordinarily difficult, was taken in stride by the Four Bruisers, an English Quartet of skaters. The hall echoed with laughter provoked by the comic antics of this foursome.

The chorus, which is composed of expert skaters who are also accomplished ballet dancers, is under the direction of Russel Marker, ballet director of the Radio City Music Hall, and their performance was marked with a beauty and precision seldom found on skates.

Fishermen are riding on the crest of the angling season. Croakers, weakfish, kingfish, porgies and bass are biting with a regularity that delights the hearts of anglers. Tuna and other game fish arrived off the coast and are giving the game fishermen exhilarating battles before they are landed.

The Absecon Island life guards' championship swimming and boating races will be held off South Carolina avenue on August 16. Four resort cities of the island will compete.

The Atlantic City beach patrol's annual water show was held in the Hygeia Hotel last night. The program featured a male beauty contest for the selection of Mr. Absecon Island from among the guards.

The Middle Atlantic States individual mothboat sailing title will be at stake during the three-day regatta of the Evening Star Yacht Club to be held August 9, 10 and 11. The meet will attract mothboat skippers from New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, North Carolina and Florida. Trophies at stake during the regatta include the Steel Pier Trophy, Evening Star Yacht Club Interclub Challenge Trophy and the Junior Middle Atlantic States title.

Fisherettes Hold Their Own

Ocean City, N. J.

Entries for the thirty-fourth annual baby parade and pageant, to be held on August 16, are being received at the Information Bureau on the Boardwalk. The rapidity with which the entry list is growing indicates a 1940 pageant that will surpass anything of previous years.

The unusual large number of fishing contests to which everyone is eligible are making the piscatorial art almost an obsession in Ocean City this summer. As a matter of record, the fisherettes are not only holding their own in this "manly sport," but are capturing many of the prizes. Sizable catches are being reported in all adjacent waters: Outside, the marlin, the tuna and the blue have already appeared in their chosen haunts and are luring many of the deep-sea fishermen to a contest of cunning and strategy. In the quiet waters of the bay, within easy rowing distance of any of the wharves, flounders and kingfish are plentiful.

A bike-breakfast-hike is the most recent novelty in the large repertoire of recreational possibilities offered the summer visitor to Ocean City. The trips, sponsored by the municipal playground director, are planned to promote a fine spirit of camaraderie among people of like interests. Leaving the Music Pier, on the Boardwalk, the bicycle brigade peddle their way to a farm house on the mainland where a regular country breakfast is served. After which there is a nature hunt, or perhaps, the playing of old-time favorite games—then back to the resort for a siesta on the sand and a refreshing dip in the ocean.

The Ocean City All-Collegiate Lacross Association has scheduled a number of twilight games on the playing field of the Recreation Center. The first game, with the Swarthmore Indians, drew a large attendance of enthusiastic fans who followed the fast and furious play with avid interest.

37 Entries Are in For Wildwood's Parade of Babies

Wildwood By-the-Sea, N. J.

Entries for Wildwood's thirtieth annual baby parade, to be held August 23, reached 37 in the first two days. Last year, over 300 youngsters were entered, making it the largest held on the Jersey Coast. It is estimated that the entries will reach 500 this year.

The city officials this year have decided to award cash prizes, instead of the customary cups and medals.

In cooperation with city publicity department, Hunt's Ocean Pier will be the scene of the fourth annual Juvenile Fashion Show. This show will be for girls between the ages of 3 and 9 years old, displaying the styles of older girls. The first division, on August 2, is for bathing suits. The second division will be August 9, for evening gowns.

From the five selected from each division will be the youngster, who will be crowned queen of the baby parade.

HOBBIES

At the Chess Table

By Willard Mutchler.

The week's chess activities get under way this morning, with a blanket invitation to local players to participate in a chess picnic at Hains Point. Play will occur, throughout the day, at a point just beyond the end of the golf course. These open-air events, inaugurated by the Chess Divan, have proved repeated successes. The present meeting is being sponsored jointly by the divan and the Federal Security C. C. Those who have boards and chessmen are urged to bring them, along with the inevitable food.

Two lectures are also on this week's calendar. M. L. Libman will essay a short educational discourse at the Federal Security's quarters in the Portland Hotel on Tuesday evening. District Champion Ariel Mengarini will lecture at the divan's quarters in the Parkside Hotel on Wednesday evening. His title, "How to Improve Your Chess Game," bids fair to attract a considerable audience. The public may witness both lectures without cost.

Capital City Tourney

Rapid transit play was in order at the Capital City Club last Saturday, with former District Champion D. H. Mugridge emerging the victor with a splendid 6½ to ½ score against strong opposition. M. C. Stark, another former District champion, finished second with a loss to Mengarini, present champ, and a draw with Mugridge. Mengarini and Sol Adler, guest star from the divan, tied with A. E. Woolsey for fourth, each losing three games. The event was conducted in accordance with Mugridge's point handicap system, with the four players named as the Class A contestants. G. F. Chase rated in the B group, with the remainder of the field in Class C. The final standings:

Player	W.	L.	Pts.
D. H. Mugridge	6½	½	45
M. C. Stark	5½	1½	37
W. B. Mundelle	3½	3½	30½
S. Adler	4	3	27
A. Mengarini	4	3	27
A. E. Woolsey	3	4	27
G. F. Chase	1½	5½	10½
W. Linderman	0	7	0

Paul Morphy Activities

The ladder tourney at the Paul Morphy C. C. continues merrily despite the summer season. In recent engagements Miller won doublets from both Burch and Richardson. Burch also lost, 1 to 2, to Richardson, but twice conquered Pustilnik. Sutphen and Mundelle won singlets, respectively, from Plampin and Benjamin. The previous report, that Mundelle had deefated Kunkle, was in error. Their match now stands at 1½ points each. The standings:

	Matches.		Games.
	W.	L.	W.	L.
E. J. Bennett	2	0	5	0
A. L. Pierce	2	0	4	0
J. Neufeld	1	1	13	3

Federal Security C. C.

Seems we have been mistakingly calling this the Social Security C. C. This enthusiastic group meets each Tuesday and features short educational lectures. Champion Harry Siller held forth at the last meeting on "Some Elementary Principles of Chess," while N. P. Wigginton opened the series with his lecture on "The Terrible Knight." Ladder matches are now in progress. H. W. Horn climbed with 2-to-1 wins over H. Bronfin and S. Solot, and a doublet over M. Levy, but has just lost a singleton to Dr. A. Steinbach. Siller and Bronfin scored 2-to-0 victories over M. L. Libman and Levy, respectively, while Bronfin defeated F. R. Stilwell, 2 to 1.

Ventnor City Tourney

The master tournament at this New Jersey resort ended with M. Hanauer and S. Bernstein tied for first honors. Philip Woliston, of Los Angeles, distinguished himself by beating both leaders, and won a brilliancy prize for his effort against Hanauer. The final standings, with a few exceptions, follow:

Player	W.	L.	Player	W.	L.
Bernstein	8	3	Donovan	5½	4½
Hanauer	8	3	Seidman	5	5
Adams	6½	3½	Morris	4	7
Santasiere	6½	4½	McCormick	3½	6½

'Picture of the Week'

Amateur photographer Mary Draper, of Vienna, Va., takes the cash award in this week's "Picture of the Week" competition. Over the Bridge Player's Shoulder

By Marian H. Barre

Less than a month ago that youthful pair of District experts, Alvin Roth and Oscar Brotman, defeated the cream of the Maryland bridge crop for the Masters' pair title in that State. Last week they garnered the District title, using the same tactics in their own home field. Local fans now are wondering if the boys' ambitions reach as far as the von Zedtwitz Cup, which is the gold trophy for National Pair championship among the wizards of the game. If this should be the case the Asbury match will stir up keen interest here.

Roth and Brotman's local victory was made last Wednesday in the finals of the Master's game, played at the Hotel Shoreham, with 28 teams taking part. The restricted field was limited to the top-notchers in tournament play, Master players are survivors who have returned with their shields after championship bouts.

Held in two sessions, the winners finished the round of July 3 tied for top with Mr. and Mrs. James H. Lemon, both teams scoring 215½ match points, a lead of more than one board over A. P. Stockvis and Paul Kibler. By unusually consistent play Roth and Brotman's second score differed from their first round by only half a point. Their total lead amounted to 17½ points. Mr. and Mrs. Lemon tied for runner-up place with Mrs. Irene Surguy and Gene Hermann. The latter pair surged up from the middle brackets to lead the field in the final round.

E. B. Conolly and J. G. Stone ranked fourth, with Mr. and Mrs. C. Murray Hall in fifth place. Total scores read as follows: Brotman-Roth, 431; the Lemons, Surguy-Hermann, 413½; Conolly-Stone, 401; the Halls, 398.

Prize awards in the masters' contest are free entry fees in the Asbury National championships in the New Jersey resort the week of August 5. The winners receive the maximum amount but runners-up also are awarded. An additional award is the master point certificates offered by the American Contract Bridge League. By a special vote the executive committee of the Washington Bridge League decided that this year for the first time District Master winners might use their entry fees either at Asbury or in the Winter championships, scheduled for Philadelphia next December. It is because of this proviso that Roth and Brotman are not committed to compete for the Von Zedtwitz Cup. Local fans hope they do so, as the young champions' strategy is best adapted to a Masters' pair field.

If the best test of bridge skill is a player's ability to succeed with different partners, then Dr. C. C. McDonnell has proved his. He took on just 19 different partners in a 21 game series at the Agriculture Bridge Club. Though he never won a game in the entire series his personal percentage out ranks all other players. Thus he retains the McDonnell Cup which he donated and held three times. Dr. McDonnell is present open pair champion of the District. The co-champion is Roy Astleford.

McDonnell assumed the voluntary handicap of numerous partners in his alleged defense of the trophy. In spite of it his average score through the season was 54.11 per cent, one point better than the cards turned in by Mrs. J. A. Hodgkins and F. L. Hoppe, who tied for second place. Other leaders in the race included O. R. Mathews, A. C. Dillman, W. J. Hukill and Mrs. M. O. Cooper.

The cup was donated to the Agriculture Bridge Club for seasonal play. It has been in competition for four years. The only other holder of it was F. C. Munchmeyer, who won it in 1937.

This is the last day of the thirteenth annual Conneaut Lake Tournament that has been in play for an entire week.

A check-up failed to disclose any District fans who are attending; they are waiting for Hershey Championships instead. This play will take place in the Hershey Inn, which is a bit of good news for temperamental tournament artists who fumed in the Community House, where the last Hershey tournament was held. Hershey is on the card this week, beginning on July 26, ending the evening of the twenty-eighth. All the usual events are listed.

The next bridge date appears in red letters on all tournament calendars—Asbury. This fourteenth annual Summer Nationals begins August 5, closing the eleventh, unless the Masters' team of four championship runs over into an extra session.

Doris Fuller's annual tuning-up game is slated for August 4. Many fans would as soon miss a major championship as this yearly preview of the big event.

When the Democratic State Convention meets in Connecticut during August, it will decide a matter in which bridge players will be as interested as politicians—the nomination of Ely Culbertson as Congressman at large from Connecticut.

The bridge czar threw his hat in the ring from Ridgefield, Conn., his legal residence. He was elected as a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in Chicago, spending the last week observing the strategy of a new game. With Ely a member of the Capital duplicate, the games here would literally get a shot in the arm.

Another celebrity who is a Capitalite by adoption is in the news. Capt. Alfred M. Gruenther has been promoted to the rank of major in the United States Army. He is now stationed at the School of Fire for Field Artillery at Fort Sill, Okla., where he instructs reserve officers. While formerly stationed at the Army War College here, the major took part in some of the local games, especially games held for charities. He was one of the best boosters of The Post Blood Bank drive in 1939. Maj. Gruenther is the leading tournament director in the country.

Up in Largent, W. Va., at the Largent Inn, they are playing two-handed and three-handed contract when they cannot get a fourth.

In all these games four additional cards are added to the regular bridge deck, usually four two-spots. The games are the invention of James A. Donnelly, who is connected with the inn.

For the two-handed game the players are seated at an angle to each other, so that a dummy can be dealt and placed face upward opposite each player, prior to the bidding. A kitty of four cards is also dealt, face downward, to remain unseen until the completion of the play. The bidding proceeds as in a regular game, each man being stuck with his dummy. The unknown four cards that are out of play adds the feature of uncertainty that is essential to any game.

Three-handed contract is played in a similar manner except that only one dummy is dealt, face upward. The players bid to have this dummy hand as partner.

Three scores are kept; in case of sets both opponents score alike for the same amount.

Salvador Puts Two Air Mail Stamps on Sale

Issues May Be Bought At Pan American Union's Latin Section

El Salvador's two new air mail stamps, issued in honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the Pan American Union, have been placed on sale at the Latin American Stamp Section of the Pan American Union. These stamps were announced in April and are now being secured by Washington collectors. The stamps are of large size, bi-colored, and both are of same design, as large globe showing the Americas. To the left is a winged figure extending an olive branch while to the right an airplane is in flight. The border carries the inscription: "Correos de El Salvador, C. A.—Servicio Aereo-1890, 1940" above the vignette and below is another inscription in Spanish: "Commemoracion de la Fundacion de la Union Panamericana" the denomination being included. The 30-centavo has a brown border and blue vignette and the 80-centavo has a red border and black vignette. The stamps are unwatermarked, printed in sheets of 50 stamps, by the American Bank Note Co., New York. The two stamps are sold as a set for 44 cents.

Ecuador's Pan American Union commemorative arrived last week. There are four postage and four air mail stamps in the series. All of the stamps are large, one design being for the postage set and another for the air mails. The four postage values and colors are: 5-centavo, rose and black; 10c., blue and black; 50-c., blue-green and black, and 1-sucre, purple and black. This design shows flags of the 21 republics grouped on a globe. The air mail design shows a globe with map of the Western Hemisphere flanked by two male figures holding a modern plane. The values and colors: 10-centavo, orange and blue; 70-c., brown and blue; 1-sucre, brown and blue, and 10-s., black and blue. The stamps are inscribed: "Quincuagesimo Anniversario de la Union Panamericana" and "1890-1940." On the air mail stamps the words "Service Aereo" also appear.

Lithuania has issued a 15-cental, orange yellow, stamp of an attractive design, illustrating a kneeling figure releasing a dove. The figure from the medieval period shows a woman with her hair in long braids. The name of the country is at the top of the stamp and the denomination in large figures at the bottom right.

France causes much speculation as what its immediate stamp program will be. The fall of the Third Republic and the entering of Fascist rule may bring all sorts of new issues though nothing of an official nature has been forthcoming. The situation of the French colonies in the philatelic world also causes much concern.

At the meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Tuesday evening at the Thomson Community Center, a short auction was held and numerous fine selections of United States and foreign stamps and covers were disposed of. A change has been made in the auction programs when at each meeting from now on a few lots will be disposed of rather than holding two lengthy sales each month.

President D. H. Reichgut presided. The entertainment was conducted by A. H. Whitney who asked ten philatelic questions of all present. Slips were distributed and answers were recorded. At the next meeting a prize will be awarded for the most complete answers. At the meeting on Tuesday evening a round table discussion will be on the program when a number of leading collectors will be asked questions pertaining to philately.

An exhibition of German stamps and covers was held and the usual bourse was well patronized.

The Washington Air Mail Society met Tuesday evening in Thomson Community Center. President J. O. Peavey presiding. It was announced that the Postoffice Department officials in charge of the air mail division was unable to say whether an official cachet would be used at the airport dedication. The society has asked the department for such an official cachet. Ralph Cole, sales manager, exhibited a circuit. Joseph H. Spriegelberg and Milton Golden were guests of the evening, both being interested in air mails. Among those participating in the meeting were Mrs. Mabel L. Wilson, Miss Helen Voorhees, C. H. Vaughan, Maurice S. Petty, Ralph Cole, W. M. Stuart and Mr. Peavey. The next meeting will be held Tuesday evening, August 30, at the Thomson Community Center.

Stamps

The controversy regarding the issuance of a commemorative stamp or souvenir sheet on May 6, 1940, honoring the "penny black" has been satisfactorily ended so far as the National Federation of Stamp Clubs is concerned. Recently the federation requested member clubs whether the federation should enter a protest to the Postoffice Department for "their failure to issue a stamp commemorating the centenary of the postage stamp." The result was that almost the identical number voted to protest as compared with those who thought that the matter should be entirely ignored. Many of those who voted to ignore the matter said this celebration was not our own centenary and that in 1947 the centennial of the first United States postage stamp would be fittingly observed.

The federation asks all stamp clubs to co-operate in the effort to raise funds for various worthy causes of relief by the sale of stamps at auction. The National Philatelic Auctions for Refugee Relief has been organized in New York City, under the chairmanship of Harry Woodburn Chase, chancellor of New York University. It is now planned to hold a large auction sale in New York City at the Collectors Club, 22 East Thirty-fifth street, in either September or October.

President Roosevelt has issued a proclamation for National Aviation Day on August 19, 1940. Congress passed a resolution approving of such a day and suggested a new air mail stamp, but this was not carried out by the Postoffice Department.

The return trip of the first flight to New Zealand started yesterday and the clipper is due in San Francisco on Wednesday. The first transpacific service to New Zealand by Pan American Airways was inaugurated July 12 when the huge Boeing Clipper left Los Angeles bound for Hawaii. More than 100,000 first-flight covers were carried. The elapsed time for the trip is four and a half days for the 8,000 miles.

The only available air mail service for Burma, India and Ceylon at this time is via the transpacific route, the transit time being from 9 to 12 days. Air mails for Bahrein Island, Afghanistan, Baluchistan, Iran and Iraq, will be sent by air to India, thence by ordinary means to destination. The total air mail postage for this service to countries mentioned is 70 cents per half-ounce.

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, sent first-day covers of the Wyoming fiftieth anniversary commemorative stamp on July 10, 1940, with an interesting letter and a statement on "Our Wyoming Charter of Freedom." On December 10, 1869, Wyoming then a territory, granted suffrage to women and when the territory became a State the provision was retained in the constitution. In his letter the Senator says: "The Wyoming constitution is notable, not only because of the provisions for women suffrage, but also because it contains an eloquent and forceful declaration of those principles of human freedom upon which this Republic was founded and which seem today to be undergoing the supreme test." At Cheyenne on July 10 there were 156,706 first-day covers canceled and 325,982 stamps sold amounting to $9,779.46.

The advance sheets of the 1941 edition of the Standard Postage Stamp Catalogue, alphabetically with United States last, will be mailed by Scott Publications in installments beginning July 23. There will be many changes and improvements in the new catalogue this year. Dates of issue of individual items will be noted and watermark illustrations will be located in the body of the catalogue with the illustrations of the stamps on which the watermark was first given, but because of unnecessary duplication those of the British Crown Colonies are still retained as a separate reference. New illustrations of over 550 overprints or surcharges are noted, being reproduced in actual size of the original and are much clearer and easier to locate. Then new headings of countries with a standardized presentation of information give pertinent facts readily available.

Farley estimates that thousands of dollars worth of stamps were sold to collectors through postoffices that have philatelic windows during the fiscal year that closed June 30, 1940. Sales list No. 149, dated July 2, 1940, has been issued by the Philatelic Agency and is now available. The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

The Postoffice Department calls official attention to the fact that there is only one Philatelic Agency. In this Agency only selected stock of current postage stamps is sold to collectors. In some of the larger cities philatelic windows are opened at stated hours where also selected stock may be purchased. These are intended as an aid to stamp collectors in securing the best available material.

STUART.

The Department has been forced to reprimand postmasters and clerks all over the country because they sell selected stock and fail to dispose of the remainder. All stamp collectors are familiar with the rules and regulations along these lines. It is not ethical to ask a postoffice clerk to sell plate blocks, gutter line blocks, or in fact any kind of selected material in direct violation of postal rules and regulations. In some instances, stamps withdrawn from the Agency have been found in postoffices, and in one or two cases even sales lists were being issued to a certain clientele. The collector has been greatly favored, and it seems intolerable that a few should seek to disrupt the whole Philatelic Agency.

The Department demands and in nearly every instance obtains the full cooperation of postmasters and window clerks in supplying stamps of good quality to collectors. The sales of the Agency for fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, amounted to $1,100,670.29 as against $1,312,016.48 for the previous fiscal year. The loss of revenue may be due to philatelic windows and postoffices cutting into the business of the Agency, which, however, will no doubt continue a real and legitimate source of stamp supply to collectors.

It is to the interest of philately, organized and unorganized, that stamp collectors observe postal rules and regulations.

MOTORISTS contemplating vacations in the Southlands next winter will be interested in knowing what progress is being made toward completion of the two-mile bridge between Morgantown, Md., and Dahlgren, Va. Different in construction from other bridges of similar length, this span has some 12,000 tons of steel beginning to sprout from the 29 piers designed for the short-cut highway. Half of the cantilever span, weighing 2,000 tons, is shown above, stretching into space, ready to meet the network from the opposite tower pier. Ironworkers were busy riveting deck trusses 150 feet above the water when this photo was made. Section of Maryland approach is shown below.

Saving the Forests

WISCONSIN, like other States, is proud of its acres of forests. To protect nearly 13,000,000 acres of timber from fire, the State, in cooperation with Federal agencies, has established a vast fire-fighting organization under the Conservation Department. These pictures show how Wisconsin protects the wooded area.

ON LOOKOUT FOR FOREST FIRES.

Towerman Gould, located in Indian Lake tower, sights smoke through an alidade and calls his station, informing them of approximate location.

OFF ON A HOT JOB.

Young men of the CCC organization who have done much in the fight against forest fires in Wisconsin. They build fire lanes, burn slash and clear out brush.

A FIRE DANGER METER.

Forest ranger manipulating an envelope sliding device known as a "fire danger meter." Findings based on condition of vegetation, wind velocity, humidity and days since the last rain are used in assigning the patrols or lookouts.

FLAME THROWER.

Back-fire apparatus is used to start counter fires when a big blaze threatens to grow even greater. A worker demonstrates how a fire is started to burn out a bigger one.

SPOTTING A FOREST FIRE.

When a tower man reports a fire to the district ranger, he in turn uses a protractor map to locate the blaze. An alidade reading from two lookouts is taken and the blaze is where the strings intersect. The timberland area has been photographed from the air. Worker below is assembling the map preparatory to locating some new towers.

FIRE TOWER—LOOKING SKYWARD.

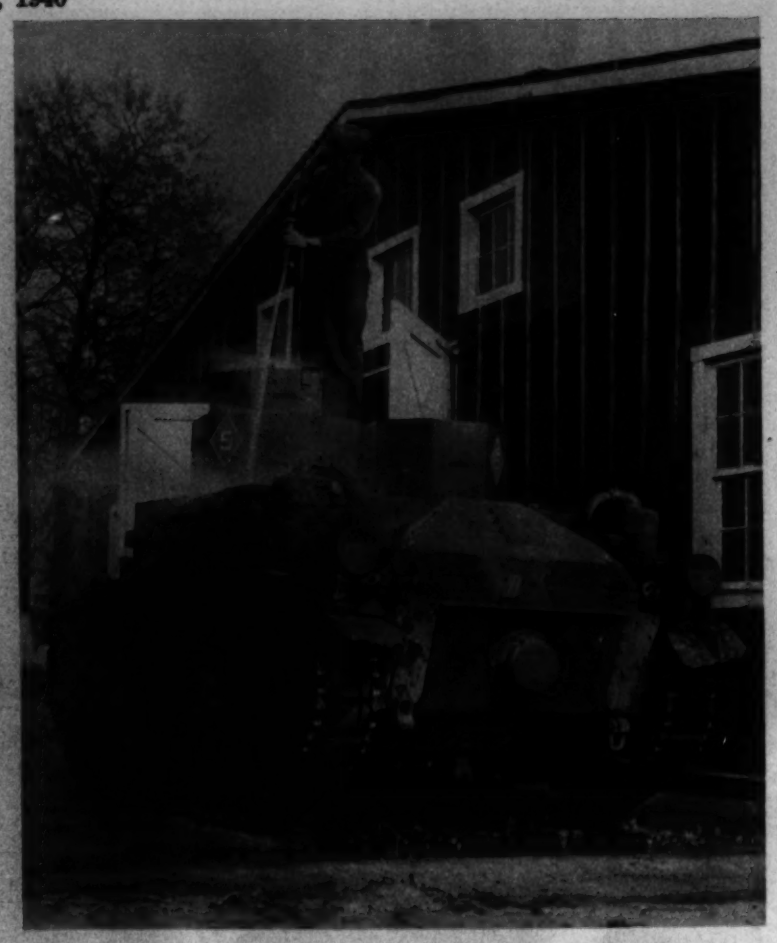
One hundred and twenty-two sentinels dot the ranges of Wisconsin's forests. Lookouts are always on duty in these towers.

SPADES ARE TRUMPS

when a fire-fighting crew is called into action. CCC youths are practicing cutting fire lanes. Speedy trucks are used to transport the volunteer workers and others to the scene of a blaze. Rangers use phone and radio to marshal help.

MECHANIZED FORCES.

There are 67 tilting bed trailers to transport tractors and fire line plows to the scene of forest fires in Wisconsin.



LIKE A CAVALRYMAN, YOU MUST WASH 'EM DOWN

Just as the cavalryman looks after his horse before seeing to his own comfort, the tank soldier must care for his steed of steel. Big Boy, the tank at left with the twin cannons is a veteran of '17. A British-made heavyweight that was used by the A. E. F. during the Chateau-Thierry engagement.

Tanks and More Tanks

DURING the last World War combat forces of the U. S. Army saw many changes, among which was the addition of a separate branch known as the Tank Corps, an effective fighting unit of armored mobile vehicles. This particular branch of the service was speedily disbanded following the Armistice. Old line officers apparently felt that the cavalry, artillery and infantry detachments might better absorb the "iron horses" first developed at the suggestion of Winston Churchill, now Premier of England. Tank units were assigned to the infantry regiments; combat cars were parked in cavalry stables.

Only recently the order was issued establishing a new army corps: a separate branch of the service. Two divisions are being formed. Light and heavy tanks, mobile artillery and combat cars heretofore assigned to infantry and cavalry detachments will be included in each division. A selected personnel of skilled mechanics, both officers and enlisted men, are to be assigned to the new motorized divisions. Some observers think the formation of the new mobile army is a direct result of German war films recently exhibited before members of Congress. The same films which depicted the speedy advance of a mobile Nazi army through Poland, had been previously screened for army staff officers. However, the Tank Corps, an effective unit of the old A. E. F., an outfit that sputtered along with British and French made "iron horses" is now reincarnated and will be recognized in future as the Armored Corps.

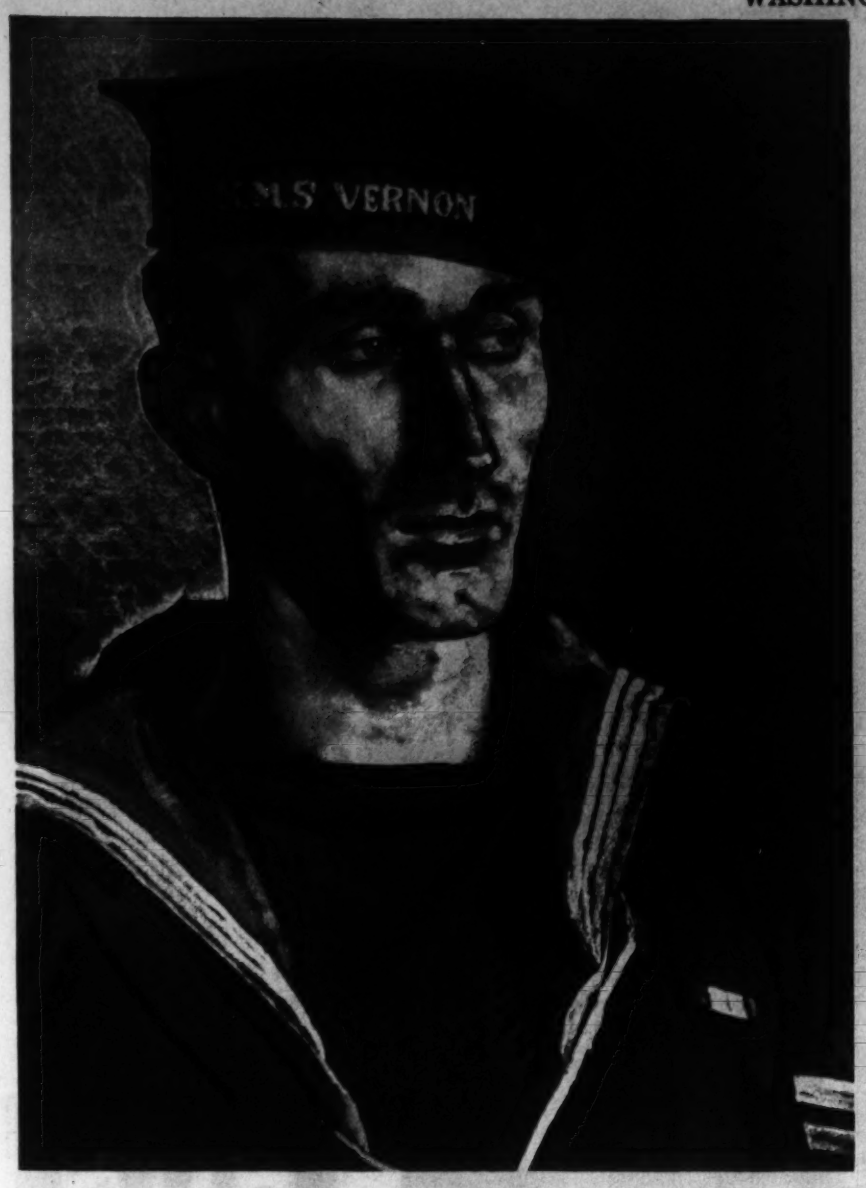
What Is Your Face Worth? ELECTROLYSIS



SAILOR FROM H. M. S. VERNON
is the title of this vigorous portrait by Eric Kennington who was commissioned by the Admiralty in 1940.

British War Art

THAT British sang-froid has stood up well under the impact of modern war is one of the impressions to be drawn from these pictures—reproductions of the first paintings of the war by English artists, now on exhibition in the National Gallery in London. Aside from their artistic merit, they are a testimonial to the courage and discipline of the men who painted them under conditions that, as the subject matter attests, ranged from distracting to appalling.

SHARP, COLD LINES of modernism are evident in the painting, "Ship's Screw on Truck," the work of Eric Ravilious, who completed a number of canvases while the British forces were in Norway.

"PUTTING ON ANTIGAS CLOTHES."
Grim, elemental humor is depicted in this series showing one woman helping another into grotesque antigas clothes. It was done by Evelyn Dunbar.

H. M. S. EXETER.
Return of one of the ships which figured heroically in the engagement with the German battleship Graf Spee is the subject of the painting by Charles Cundall, A. R. A.

"HALLUIN"
is the title of this canvas, executed by Edward Bawden. A cemetery may be seen behind the trench in foreground.

AIR FIELD IN COURSE OF CONSTRUCTION.
In this painting by Barnett Freedman, war office artist, there is a suggestion of the technique usually applied to pastoral landscapes. It shows an air field and runway being built near Arras, France.

The Post Surveys D. C. National Guard

A strong man armed keepeth the peace.

In this spirit more than 2,200 officers and men of the District National Guard are rushing preparations, under direction of Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, to take part in large scale maneuvers early next month in up-State New York.

Already the deepening international crisis has forced enlargement and strengthening of the District National Guard. Future additions in personnel and increases in materiel aad equipment are expected.

Ever since its organization as the militia in 1802, the National Guard has been ready to do its bit at the crucial moment.

District Guardsmen were on the Mexican Border shortly before the World War and many of them were in the front lines in France during the conflict.

After the Armistice, the District Guard was completely reorganized and its present units formed. These are the State Staff and Detachment, 121st Engineers, 260th Coast Artillery (antiaircraft), 29th Division Special Troops, 104th Quartermaster Regiment and Company A, 372nd Infantry.

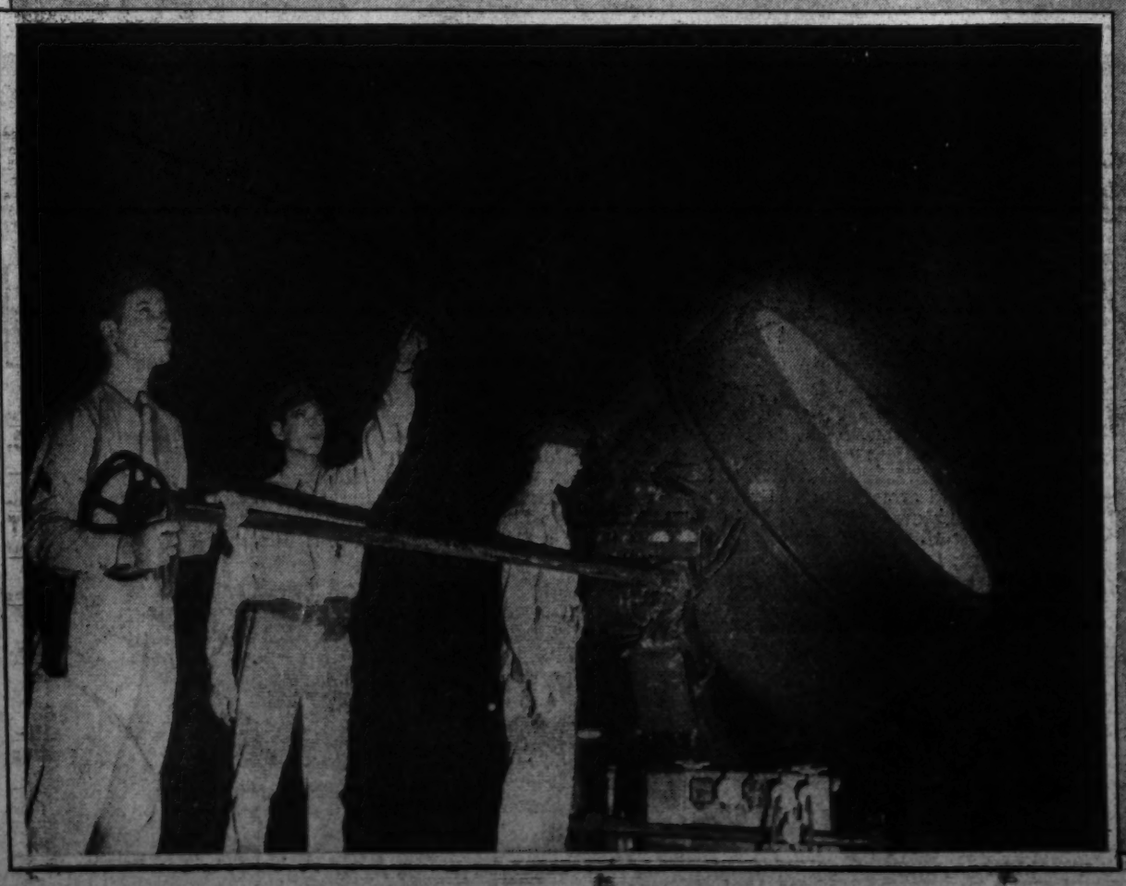
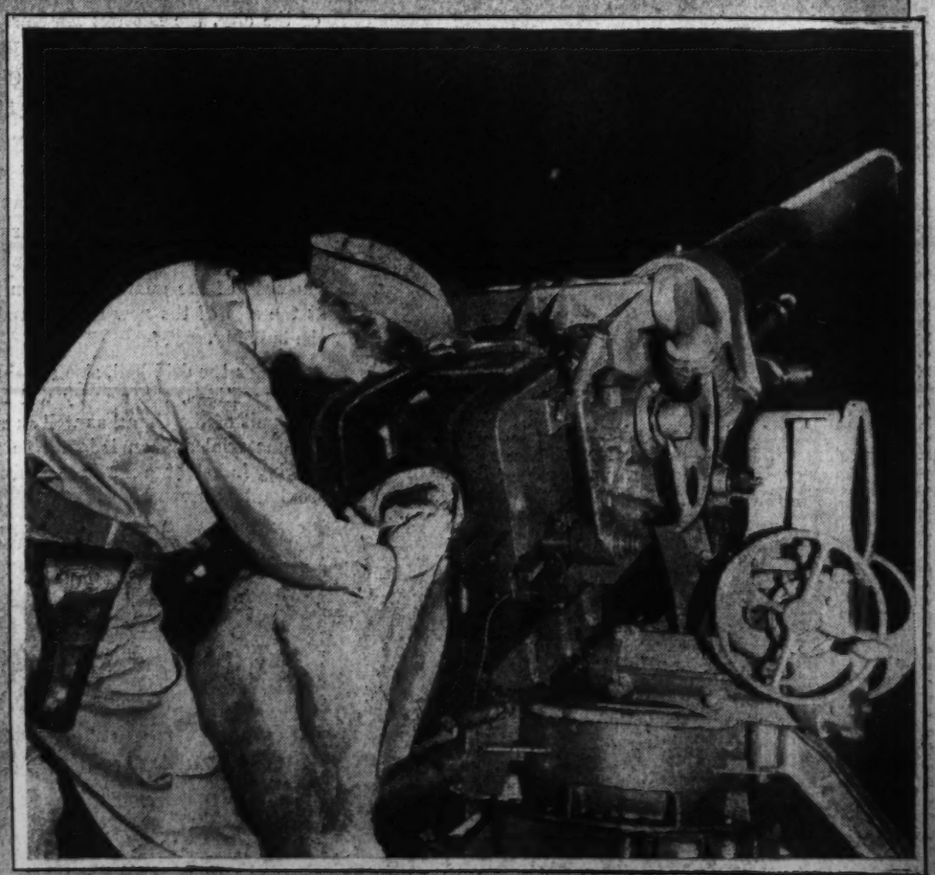
PASSING UP AMMUNITION calls for speed and precision since each 3-inch gun fires 25 rounds per minute. Every four-gun battery can fire 1,500 pounds of explosive projectiles each minute. In line are Privates (first class), A. M. Murray, W. P. Volk and G. B. Darcey, and Privates E. W. Weaver, jr.; H. W. Long and J. E. Botts.

UNDER DIRECTION of Sergt. George C. Giddens, right, Battery B, 260th Coast Artillery goes through "dummy drill" on a 3-inch gun. Twenty-nine pound dummies are same weight and size as live shells.

PRIVATE J. A. REESE catches the dummy as it leaves gun, while Privates Darcey, Botts and W. D. Dabney, jr., look on.



SERGT. Edward A. Thomas, section chief, points in picture at right toward plane to be searchlighted. Corpl. J. P. Tallon operates controls and Private W. B. Wolfe, the lamp.



THE BREECH of the gun is cleaned before each firing as Private Long is doing here.

D. C. Guard Draws Men From All Walks of Life

Armies are representative of the peoples they serve and the great national armies of the United States have been no exception.

Drawing men from every walk of life, America's Armies in time of conflict become skillfully organized forces designed and planned to accomplish the Nation's most critical task—maintaining its security.

Typical on a small scale of the all-embracing character of modern warfare is the National Guard. With little fanfare and appearances before the public generally limited to national holiday parades, the guard quietly pushes ahead behind the scenes of civilian life preparing for its part in national defense.

Here are presented men of the District National Guard at their everyday pursuits. Some of these Guardsmen, and many of their fellows, were in France during the World War. Experience they have gained in civilian undertakings can be put to good advantage to perform the myriad services needed by the Guard. Skilled trades and crafts learned in the Guard frequently are found useful in civilian life.

Interest in questions of national defense and awareness of the need for military training, unite Guardsmen of all ranks and grades in their belief they need more field experience, more equipment, more opportunity to test their knowledge. Consequently, they welcome news that additional funds are available for national defense.

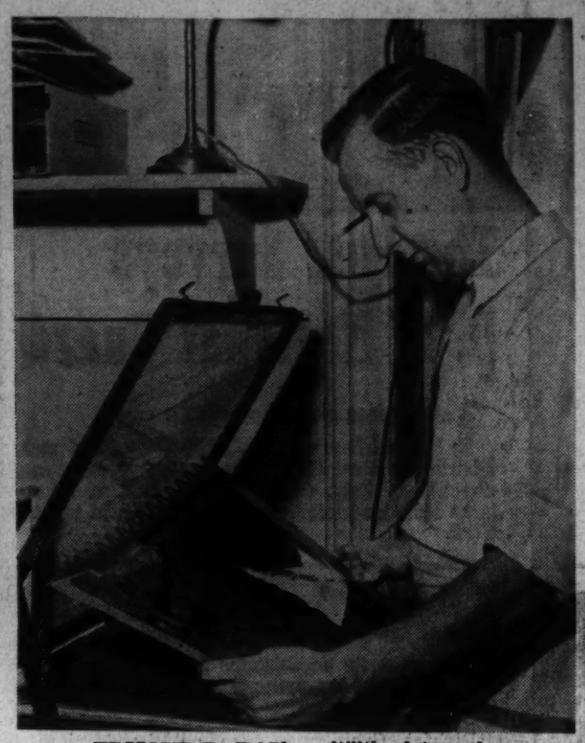
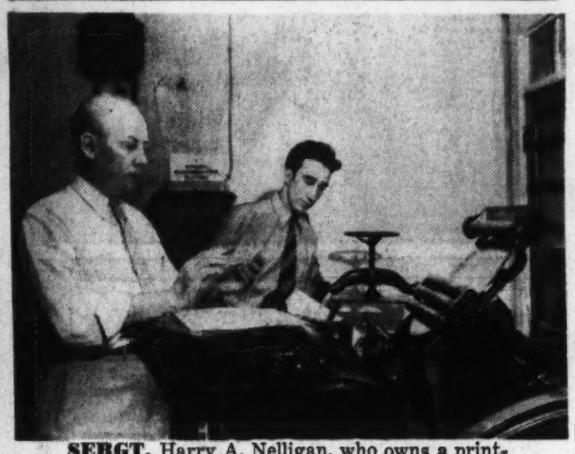
IN THE POSTOFFICE Inspectors Bureau, Sergt. George W. Boozer, of Battery E., 260th Coast Artillery, handles reports of illegal use of the mails.

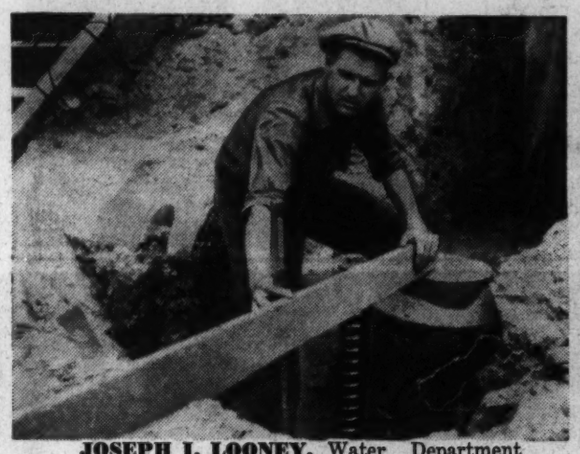


EDMOND R. DAY, multilith plate maker, a sergeant in the 104th Quartermaster Regiment, is in charge of section of supply trucks for the District Guard.



SERGT. Harry A. Nelligan, who owns a printing and engraving shop, checks proof with his helper, Elmer Gusick. He is chief of the Guard's finance section.

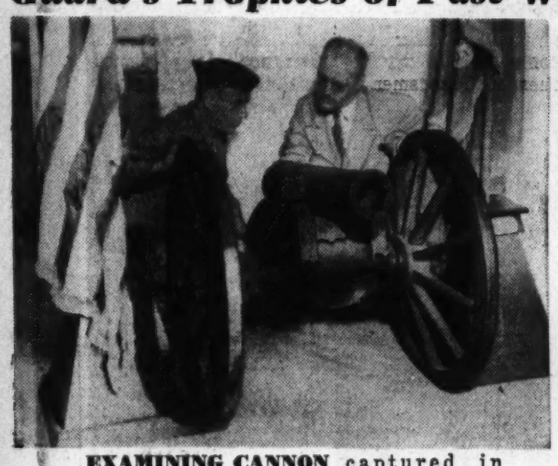
INSTRUCTING K. A. Taylor at a local athletic club is Sergt. Edwin B. Albaugh, who is chief of the personnel section, 104th Quartermaster Regiment.



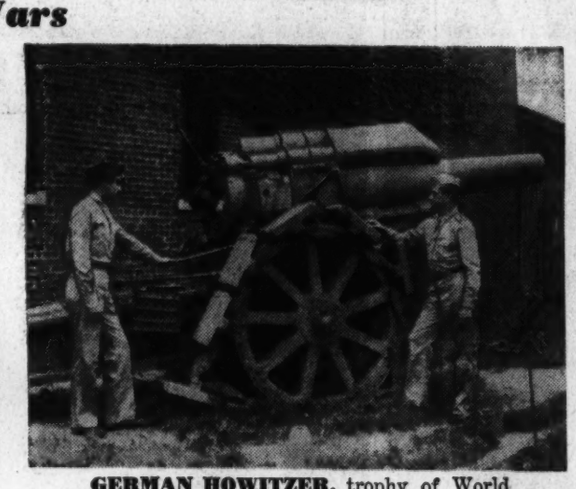
JOSEPH I. LOONEY, Water Department foreman, checks pipe levels of a water main. A sergeant of the 104th Quartermaster Regiment, he is chief of its salvage section.

IN CIVILIAN LIFE, Sergt. Arthur J. De Koven, of Battery C, 260th Coast Artillery, is a draftsman for a Washington iron works. He is seen on the job above.

Guard's Trophies of Past Wars



EXAMINING CANNON captured in Spanish-American War are Pvts. J. C. Gates and Capt. R. J. Martin.

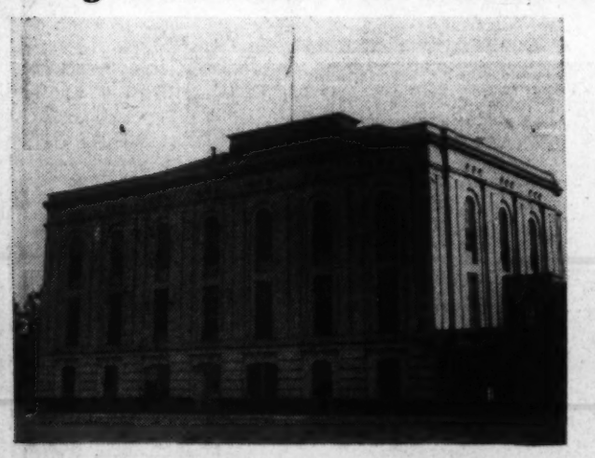


GERMAN HOWITZER, trophy of World War, is inspected by Sergt. Kalman Vadney and Lieut. Joseph Berst.

MASTER SERGT. Norval B. Smith, who would be a second lieutenant if called to active duty, is manager of a warehouse. Here he is pictured giving directions to C. W. Owen, left.

EUGENE GORINI, private in Battery E, 260th Coast Artillery, is an employe of the Treasury Department. He is shown filing savings bond stubs.

Many Structures Have Housed National Guard Here



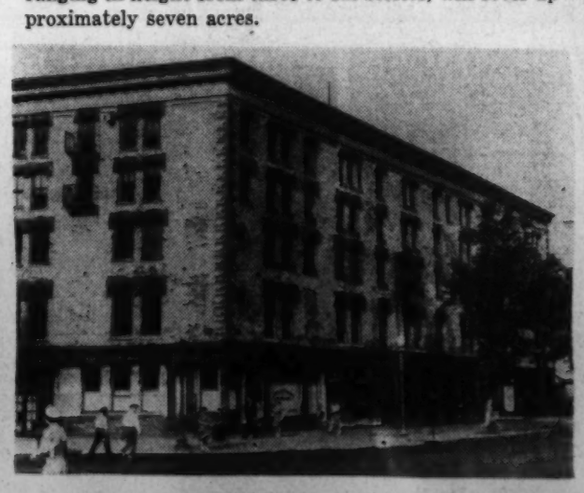
ARMORY built shortly before Civil War was used as hospital and home of Bureau of Fisheries. Agriculture Department's office of exhibits now occupies it.

Although its history extends almost to the founding of the city, the District National Guard has had but a single armory built for its use. It occupied the structure for a very few years before the Civil War and since that conflict has never had a building fitted to its needs.

As the result of the efforts of Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, commander of the District National Guard, and his associates, the guard finally is to have its own armory. The new building will excel by far structures occupied in the past by the local military organizations. Some of the "homes" of the guard are shown here along with work at the site of the new armory and architect's plans for the building.

Besides the drill hall, also suitable for conventions and large meetings, the armory will have headquarters for each unit of the Guard as well as storage space for guns and material and an indoor rifle range. The building, ranging in height from three to six stories, will cover approximately seven acres.

OLD CONVENTION HALL, now Center Market, was used for National Guard drills at the turn of the century. Structure in left background was armory for several years.



PRESENT ARMORY was built in 1810 by R. C. Weightman, captain of the Columbian Dragoons, early Washington militia outfit. It was occupied by the Guard in 1930.

Teaching Mr. Citizen To Be a Soldier

With interest focused on projected expansion of American military services, especially in aircraft and antiaircraft defense, The Post went to the 260th Coast Artillery to ascertain what goes into making a recruit an able soldier.

At the National Guard Armory, Sixth and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, we met J. Wesley Gardner, jr., who was joining up just because he "was interested."

Gardner, who wrings a living as assistant clerk at the District Court, is a student at the Washington College of Law. He picked the coast artillery regiment to participate in its antiaircraft defense activity.

Rapidly expanding, the 260th is a high-ranking, efficient regiment ready for action when mobilized. Because of the high state of training, its officers do not expect their organization to be among National Guard units called to active duty this fall to gain additional field experience.

They look forward to great maneuvers, however, shortly to be held to test National Guard efficiency in actual field conditions.

RECRUIT J. Wesley Gardner, jr., of the Clerk's Office of District Court, scans legal papers before filing them.

ASSISTED by Corp. Albert L. Cox, jr., Gardner fills out his papers for enlistment in the National Guard. He will undergo a series of tests for . . .

PHYSICAL FITNESS. Here Capt. Malcolm McKaig, of the Medical Corps, listens to Gardner's heart. Immediately after enlistment, recruits are inoculated.

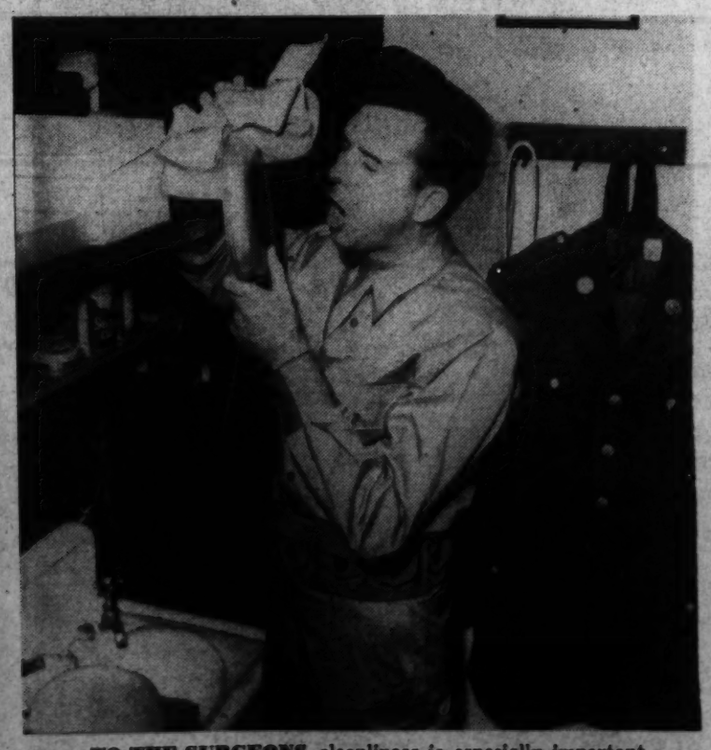
CAPT. PERRY HUFF, of Battery C, 260th Coast Artillery, administers oath to reenlisting Sergt. William B. Rodes and Gardner. In their oath of enlistment, they swear to "bear true faith and allegiance to the United States and the District of Columbia . . . (to) serve them faithfully against all their enemies whomsoever . . ."

AFTER ENLISTMENT Gardner is introduced to his regimental commander, Col. Walter W. Burns, of the 260th Coast Artillery, by Maj. William J. Heale, commander of the First Battalion. In welcoming Gardner to the regiment, Col. Burns stresses responsibilities of Guardsmen, especially in present world situation.

IN THE SUPPLY ROOM Gardner gets standard issue of Guard equipment from Sergt. John Boyd. "How'll you have 'em, too large or too small," is supposed to be standard wisecrack. Supply personnel think it extremely unfunny, never say it.

SINCE NEATNESS is part of the military tradition, Gardner tries a little elbow grease on his shoes, is encouraged by thought regimental dance is not far in offing.

TO GET PROMOTED in the Guard, Gardner finds, knowledge must be garnered. Here he puts in some heavy study on best methods for using antiaircraft guns, finds subject fascinating. Emphasis today is strong on training in military mechanics.



TO THE SURGEONS, cleanliness is especially important on the inside of a messkit, but to inspecting officers even the outside must shine. With a heavy hand, Gardner gets a high polish on his kit.

WITH OTHER RECRUITS and Guardsmen who have reenlisted, Gardner "falls in" to hear Sergt. Rodes read and explain the Articles of War or the laws governing the National Guard. Knowledge of the regulations and their application is the surest road to promotion.

WHEN COL. JOHN W. OEHMANN, commander of the 121st Engineers, makes a reconnaissance flight, his aides get up early. In this picture, made at 7:30 a. m., are Capt. A. J. Hanna, Sergt. J. E. Foley, Lieut. H. A. Byrd, Col. Oehmann, Capts. Cooper Rhodes, A. W. Meehan, C. E. Lancaster, jr., E. A. McMahon and S. E. Hartman and Sergts. W. C. Jensen and J. C. Oehmann.

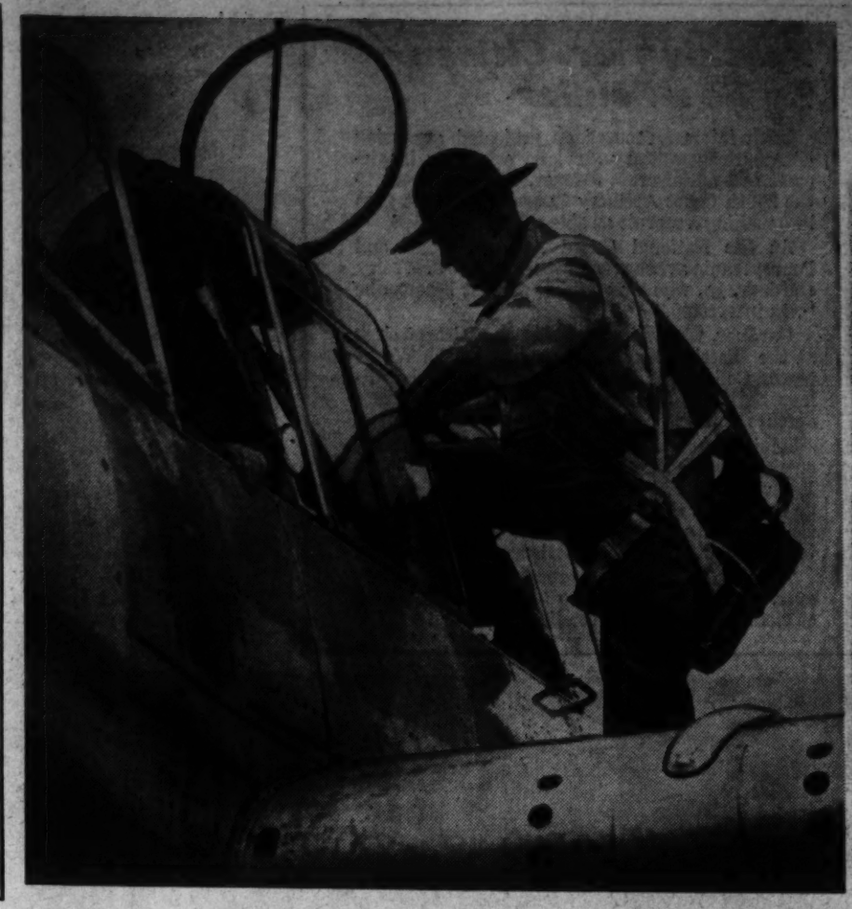
Reconnaissance Flights Aid Map Making

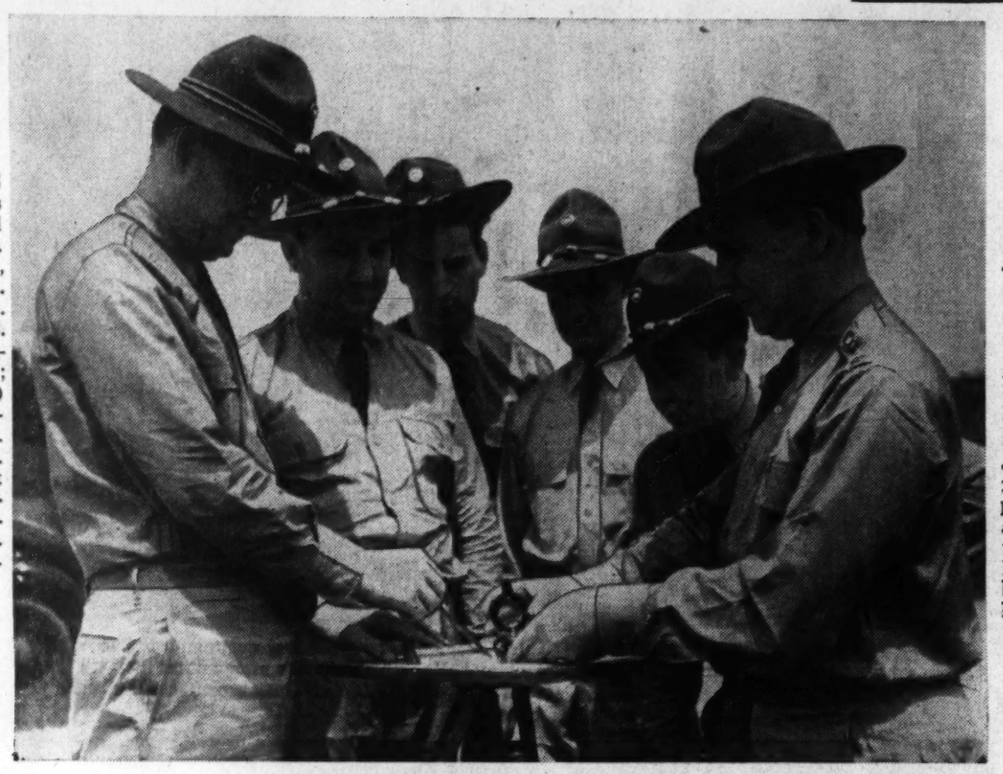
Climbing into reconnaissance plane, Col. John W. Oehmann, commander of the 121st Engineers, right, thinks about the maps his organization will be able to make with the information gathered during the flight.

Things to look for on a survey, he says, are the general terrain features, position of existing bridges and possible sites for bridges across rivers and streams.

Character of valleys with defensive positions either for defending or enemy troops also are essentials to be noted during reconnaissance activity, Col. Oehmann asserts.

War's requirements are an old story to Col. Oehmann. He enlisted in the National Guard in 1899, has served with it on the Mexican border and with the Army in France. Overseas he was munitions officer with the First Corps during the Aisne-Marne offensive, reentered the Guard after the signing of peace.

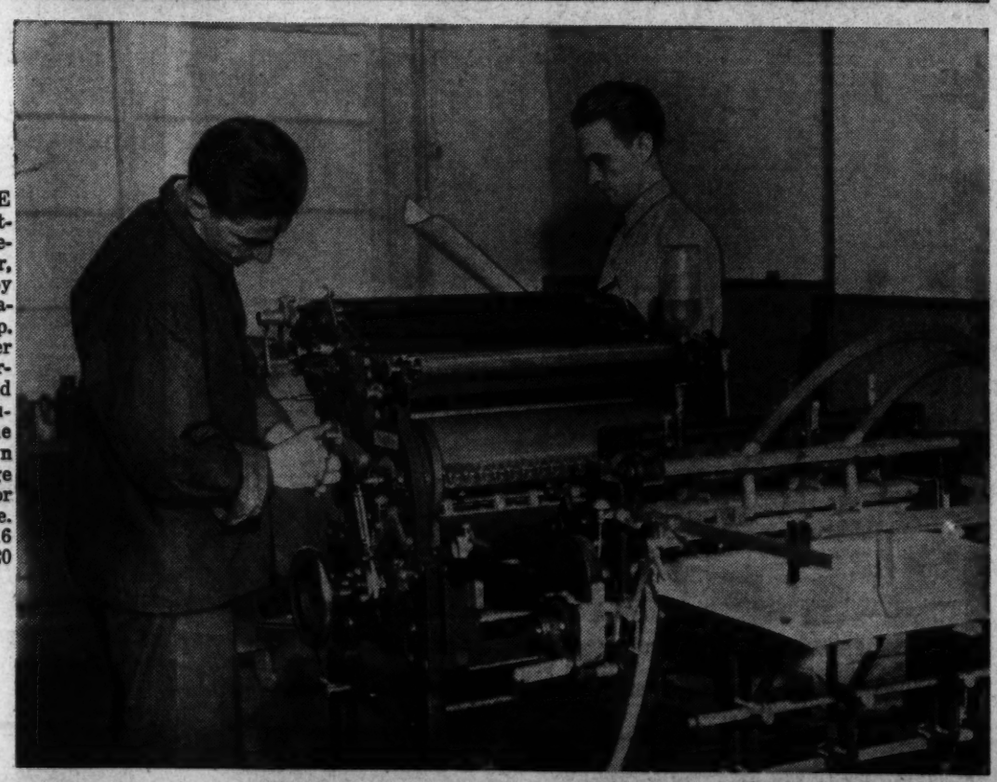




1 CHECKING compass readings and sketching on a plane table, right, are Pvt. E. E. Robertson; Pvt. (first class) C. C. Cox; Sergt. Edward Wolfman; Pvt. (first class) Thomas C. DeRamus and Pvt. I. T. Bazan. Lieut. R. C. Feldt is detailing proper uses of compass for ascertaining road direction.

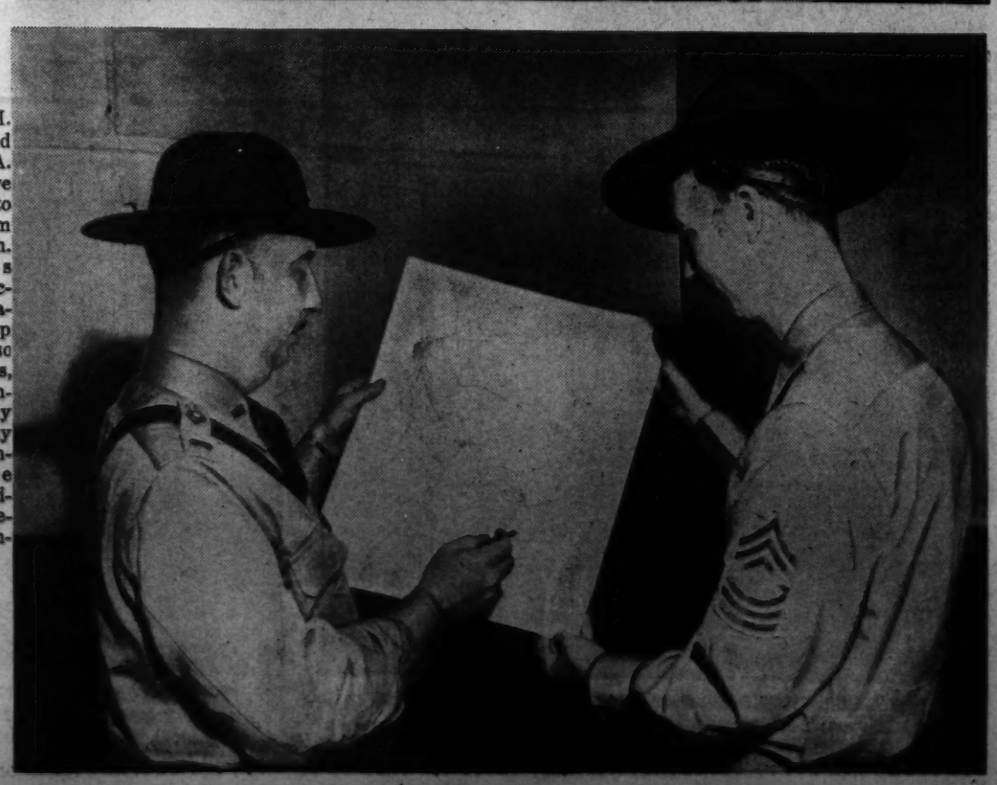
4 AFTER THE finished map has been okayed, its impression is etched on a zinc plate to be used in reproduction. Pvt. P. E. Merriman, Sergt. J. R. Grimm and Pvt. J. G. Baur carefully examine a plate immediately after its removal from acid bath. Plate will be buckled to multilith machine.

2 IN THE map room at right, where first drawings of highway routes are being prepared, Sergt. Oehmann is reading flight notes, Sergt. Jensen is plotting locations, while Lieut. Byrd checks information. In background are Sergt. Foley, Col. Oehmann and Capt. McMahon. Engineers also make artillery combat maps.



5 WITH THE plate fastened to the revolving cylinder, Pvt. J. K. Kilroy starts the machine, while Corp. H. A. Crozier checks for clearness. Paper is fed into multilith automatically. The machine can print an average of 125 maps or forms a minute. Sheets are 16 inches by 20 inches.

3 FIXING titles for the highway maps, Sergt. Foley works directly on the original, using reflected light for his work. Besides their map work, engineers also have to be ready to prepare positions for infantry, assist in rapid evacuation of untenable locations.



6 LIEUT. H. A. Byrd and Master Sergt. A. F. Scherer give the once over to a map fresh from the multilith. Military maps have detailed, accurate information vital to troop movements, also show contours, possible defensive and enemy positions. Many famous commanders have spent their military apprenticeships as engineers.

MEN OF THE 121ST ENGINEERS—like most soldiers—take an interest in rifle competitions. Here some are seen on firing line at Camp Simms with scorer at right.

121st Engineers Are Guard's Builders

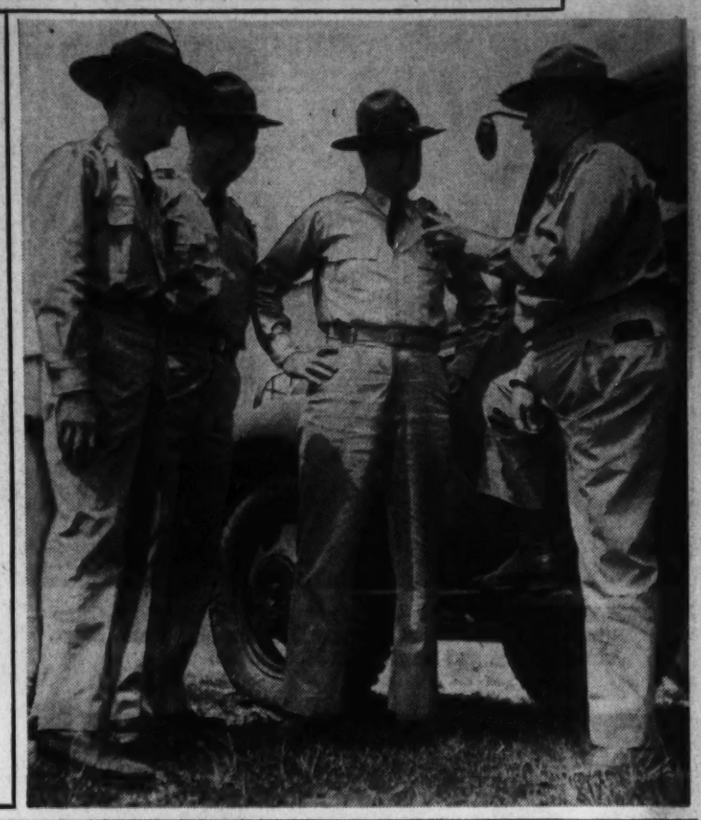
Infantry on the move gets tied in knots when highways are pitted and streams unspanned, so the 121st Engineers, District National Guard, spends many evenings and holidays learning road repairing and bridge building.

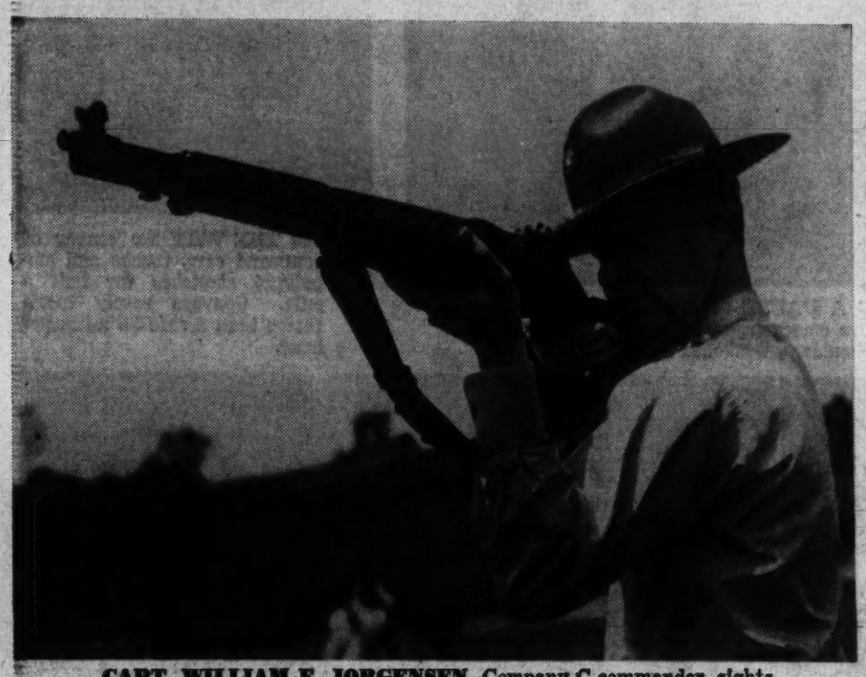
Since good roads and bridges can be useful to attackers, engineers must be accomplished in pulverizing routes, throwing up tank traps and blasting spans.

Ingenuity in preparing positions for infantry in quickest possible time also must become part of their stock in trade.

To fill its varied requirements, the National guard draws its officers from many civilian professions and pursuits. Typical officer cross-section is group planning day's training schedule at right.

Col. John W. Oehmann, commander of the 121st Engineers, who is District inspector of buildings, is seen pipe in hand giving orders to Maj. Ralph S. Childs, Second Battalion commander and sales manager for plate glass concern; Lieut. R. C. Feldt, of Company B, who is a Federal employe, and Lieut. J. F. Fitzgerald, of Headquarters and Service Company, who works for an express service.





CAPT. WILLIAM F. JORGENSEN, Company C commander, sights new Garand semiautomatic rifle, which is replacing Springfields used since turn of the century. Springfields replaced military rifle of which Capt. Jorgensen's father was coinventor.

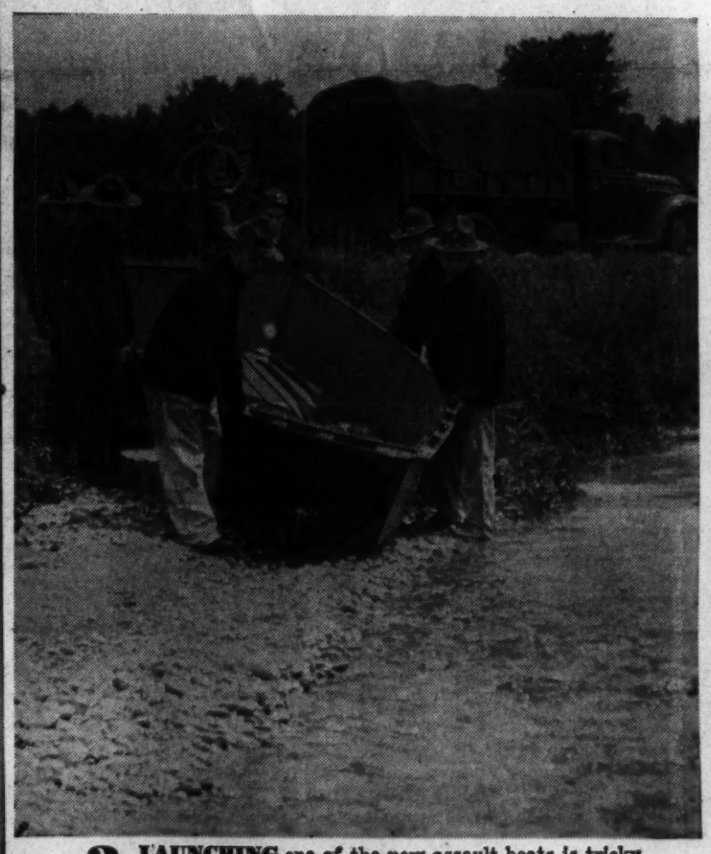
DURING A WORKOUT on the range, four Guardsmen fire from kneeling position. For rating as marksmen, expert riflemen and sharpshooters, Guardsmen also must fire accurately from standing and prone positions.

GUARDSMEN IN COMBAT mop up enemy positions this way, but would spread out more, keep down to avoid being targeted against sky. Grenades, artillery also could do job well.

Roads, Bridges Are Principal Responsibilities of Engineers

1 GUARDSMEN of Company A, 121st Engineers, practice repairing a bridge to assist infantry in crossing stream rapidly.

2 ROAD GRADING "angle dozers" get a workout in the hands of Pvts. George Metts and Robert M. Dougherty.



3 LAUNCHING one of the new assault boats is tricky even when six men lend a hand. Both, valuable as troop ferries, also can be used as pontoons.

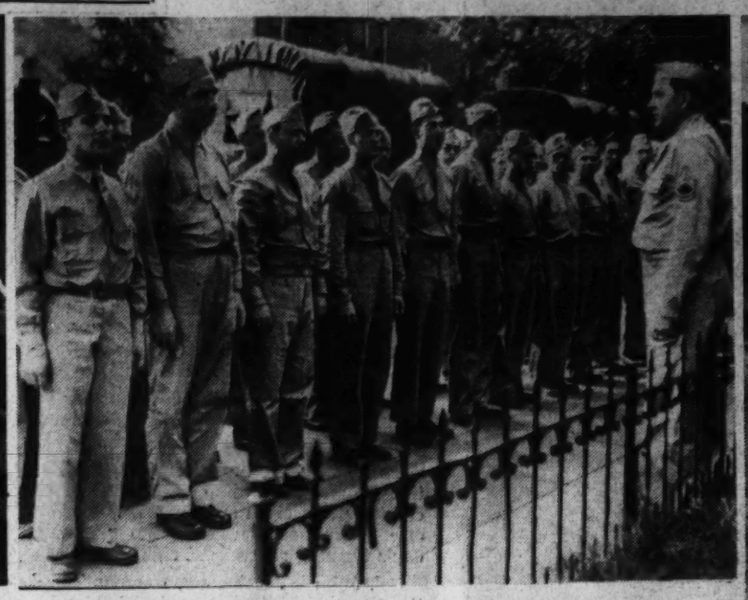
4 OPENING a new road with pneumatic drill and air compressor are Pvt. Mike Mikalaski and Sergt. Joe Keegin.

5 STEEL BEAMS are swung into place on a bridge under construction by Company A for use of trucks, tanks and heavy artillery.

6 BRIG. GEN. Albert L. Cox, Col. Oehmann, Lieut. Col. Edwin S. Bettelheim and Maj. Childs inspect the work.

A Day With a Transportation Convoy

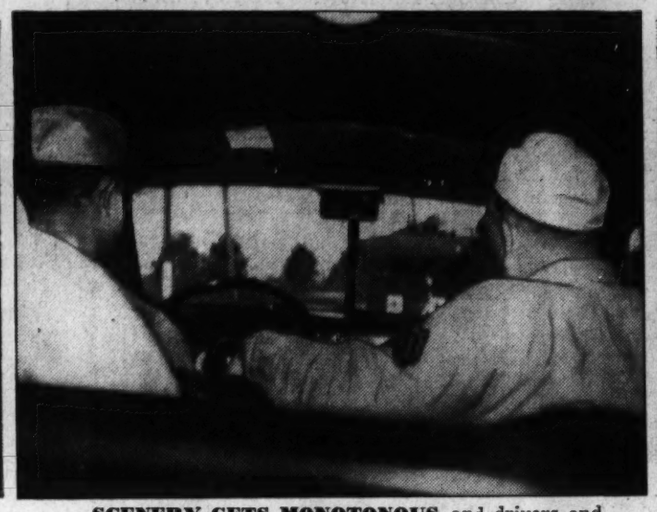
MAPPING ROUTE to convoy 372d Infantry to Camp Ritchie, Md., are Lieut. Edward D. Mulvanity, Tech. Sergt. John G. Clary, and Sergt. John M. Crandall.



INSTRUCTIONS that the convoy will move at approximately 25 miles per hour are given drivers by Sergt. Clary just before the 17 vehicles get underway.

ON THE WAY the convoy of command cars, trucks and ambulance stretches for half a mile. Convoys rarely travel faster than a safe 35 miles per hour.

THAT AWFUL "CLANK" gets taken out of a motor by Sergt. Crandall during a stop enroute to camp. Convoy made the 68 mile trip in three hours.



SCENERY GETS MONOTONOUS and drivers and riders fall back on conversation to pass time away. Principal subject is the weather.

DURING A PAUSE drivers go over various methods to solve emergencies. Among worries of drivers are soft shoulders, weakened culverts.

AFTER ARRIVAL at Camp Ritchie and unloading troops, drivers check over their trucks, fasten down canvas in preparation for trip back.

JUST BEFORE "FALLING IN" for inspection, Sergt. John N. Kailor does a minor repair job on his truck, finds work needed is less than he expected.

WITH TRUCK HOODS RAISED drivers line up for inspection by Maj. James R. Lusby. On the trip were 17 drivers and 5 assistant drivers.

The 372d Infantry Arrives at Camp

1 IMMEDIATELY upon arrival at camp, Guardsmen of the 372d Infantry, who are to undertake three weeks field training, head for their camp area . . .

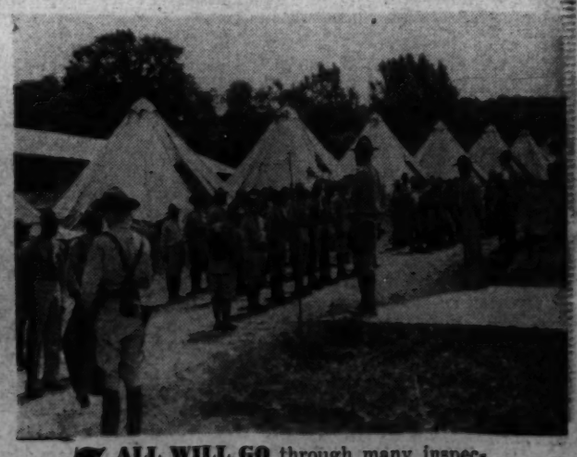
2 PUTTING UP THE TENTS. Handling heavy canvass and getting guy ropes fastened down is a skill-testing job even when two men hold center pole . . .

3 LIEUT. O. J. WINES, Capts. S. F. Blackwell and D. A. Butler and Lieut. E. E. Howley, officers of the 372d Infantry, map camp routine immediately on arrival . . .

4 FILLING BAGS to be used as mattresses is one of the first chores enlisted men have to do after getting up tents . . .

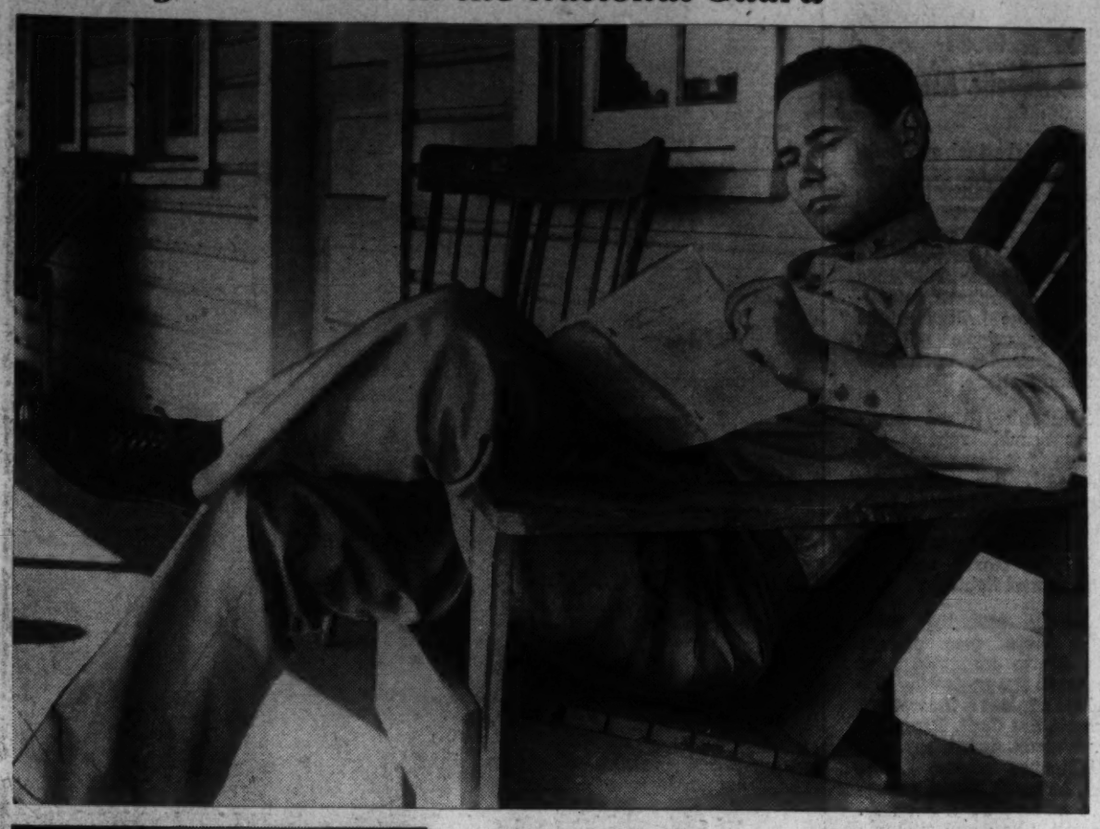
5 AS COOKS Eugene R. Davis and Raymond Fisher start that everlasting job, peeling potatoes. Their work must be done . . .

6 IN TIME to serve the chow line on the dot. During the encampment some members of chow line will be peelers . . .

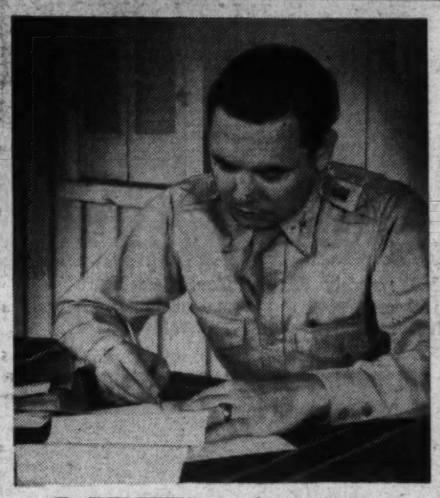


7 ALL WILL GO through many inspections in camp and during field maneuvers. They will be "convoyed" home Saturday.

Securing Promotion in the National Guard

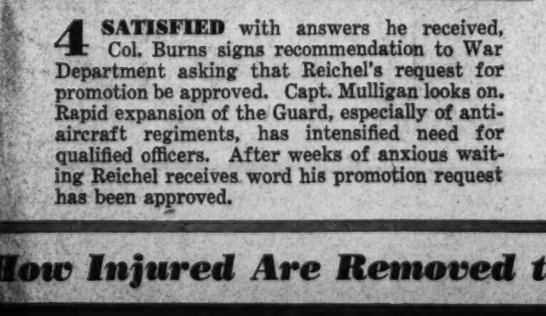


1 WHEN Lieut. Charles P. Reichel, of the 260th Coast Artillery, was up for promotion to captain, he seized every spare moment to get in a few licks on military law, field fortification, antiaircraft tactics, etc. Here he is during a "spare moment" at Camp Simms.



2 REVIEWS completed, Reichel gets down to the business of answering questions, ponders a tough one on gunnery. Examination also covers such questions as military organization.

3 AFTER hurdling written examination, Reichel appears before his regimental commander, Col. Walter W. Burns, for oral querying. Capt. Rex P. Mulligan, left, acts as secretary. Colonel's questions are slanted to ascertain Reichel's practical qualifications. "How would you get a truck back on the road after it goes through a culvert?" he asks. Reichel knows the answer, has had plenty of opportunity as lieutenant to test methods for getting mired trucks back in operation.



4 SATISFIED with answers he received, Col. Burns signs recommendation to War Department asking that Reichel's request for promotion be approved. Capt. Mulligan looks on. Rapid expansion of the Guard, especially of antiaircraft regiments, has intensified need for qualified officers. After weeks of anxious waiting Reichel receives word his promotion request has been approved.

5 COL. BURNS pins captain's bars on Reichel's shoulders and smiles his congratulations. Senior officers, generally, are encouraged when their juniors are promoted, help as much as possible.

CLEANING RIFLES in preparation for practice matches are Pvts. C. P. Moynihan and W. C. Snyder, Sergt. E. B. Lechner and Corp. A. D. Pierce.

BEFORE SHOOTING in the competition, Pvt. Moynihan blacks his sights. He is in the 121st Engineers, has rating as sharpshooter.

UNDER the watchful eye of Maj. Just C. Jensen, team coach, Tech. Sergt. E. V. Gonzales sets his sights during trial matches at Camp Simms, District National Guard teams participate in annual rifle matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, usually rank among first fifteen competitors and twice have won famed Hilton Trophy for excellence.

MAJ. JENSEN, above, clocks firing when all competitors are on the line. It takes 9 to 11 seconds for all rifles to get in action and then approximately 10 shots a minute are fired. As competition gets close, Maj. Jensen resorts to the 'scope, right, to ascertain accuracy of firing.

How Injured Are Removed to Field Hospital

IN PRACTICE DRILL Earl Martyn bandages "wounded" arm of Joseph E. Keyes in the field before removing him to base hospital for treatment. Arranging litter in foreground are Gerald Amerine and Vincent J. Rafferty. Efficient attention to wounded saves many lives when hostilities are in progress.

WITH SERGT. JOHN CURTISS supervising, Martyn, Amerine and Rafferty lift Keyes onto the stretcher. Barney Breazeal waits ready to steady Keyes as he is lowered to the blankets. Before being placed on stretcher, wounded are lifted to knees of bearers.

AFTER BEING WRAPPED in blankets, Keyes is lifted, with head higher than feet, into the ambulance for trip to hospital for treatment. Litter-bearers are C. W. Emory, Fred Post, Breazeal and Rafferty. After first-aid, bearers are careful to take precautions to prevent wounded from suffering from shock.

Guard Repels Air Raid On Rail Link

An aerial attack on Washington might have as its objective the railroad bridge across the Potomac. Since it is the sole major span for freight traffic between the Atlantic Coast and lines west of Hagerstown, demolition of the bridge might seriously cripple military forces dependent upon it for communications.

Although Guard engineers could repair the bridge if it were seriously damaged, the span's destruction would force a 300-mile detour westward of railroad traffic between the industrial North and the agricultural South.

Closely scanning military maps (see picture No. 3) to ascertain best methods for protecting the bridge against a theoretical assault are Capt. Raymond O. Watson, munitions and intelligence officer; Lieut. Col. Leroy E. Mann, executive officer; Capt. John A. Bartell, plans and training officer, and Capt. Theodore Lowrie, supply officer, all of the 260th Coast Artillery (antiaircraft) Regiment.

2 WITH DEFENSE PLANS roughly drawn, Gen. Cox hears Col. Edwin S. Bettelheim report Potomac railroad bridge is attackers' objective. Capt. Hugh Everett, jr., spots where reserves are in readiness.

3 CAPT. W. G. KEMPER takes down instructions on bridge defense from Col. Burns, commander of the 260th Coast Artillery (antiaircraft) Regiment. Regimental staff pores over military map.

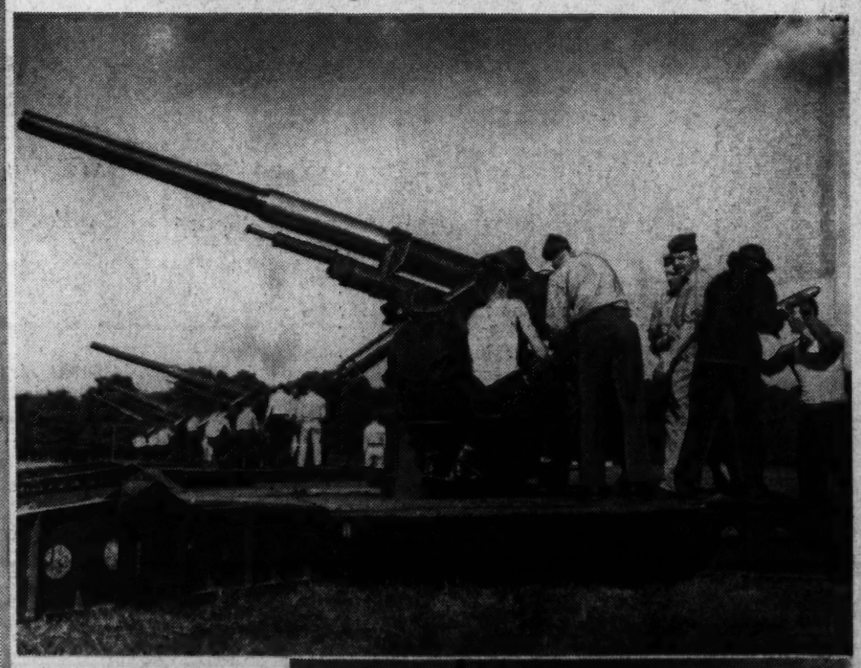
4 COL. BURNS and Lieut. Col. Leroy E. Mann, executive officer, plot prospective course of bridge bombers with the assistance of two other staff officers. They urge maximum use of favorable geographical characteristics.

5 A LONE ENEMY SCOUT, dropping down for a close look at the bridge, is greeted with a chattering burst from a battery of 50-millimeter machine guns.

Getting a Convoy Under Way Is Real Task for Military Police

CAPT. DONALD A. FALK, of the 29th Military Police Company, instructs detachment in its duties while getting convoy under way and out of camp.

TRAFFIC IS HUSTLED off the convoy's route by Sergt. Irvin Halober while Sergts. Alton Brown and Willis Rowe explain action to Miss Viola Somerville.



6 THREE-INCH guns of Battery B start pounding away at streaking bombers, above, as Pvt. (first class) Roy P. Vinall, of the Headquarters Battery, right, relays route and number of attacking planes to other batteries ready near the bridge and in environs of the National Capital. Besides "knocking out" planes, 3-inch guns keep advancing aircraft at great heights, thus destroy bombing aim. Fifty-millimeter guns' mission is to defend 3-inch batteries and other objectives against low-flying or diving planes.

SERGT. CLIFFORD P. TROUT phones convoy that route is open. Pvts. James R. Norfolk, jr., and Joseph J. Weatherly, jr., are ready to repair breaks in field line.

WITH WAVE of his hand, Capt. Percy O. Huff, of the 260th Coast Artillery, directs convoy to "wind up;" get under way out of camp.
